P R E F A C E.

WHILE I was engaged in translating and editing Scheller's large Latin Lexicon, which has lately issued from the Oxford University Press*, I perceived that a judicious abridgment of that work, with certain improvements and adaptations, would constitute a complete and valuable Latin Dictionary, for the use of Colleges and Schools. I soon learnt that Scheller had abridged his own work, and that this smaller Dictionary had been materially improved by the labours of subsequent editors, particularly G. H. Lünemann, under whose name it was published in the sixth and following editions. Upon examination, I found that this work retained all that was valuable in Scheller's abridgment, and presented moreover many important additions and improvements; but I discovered, at the same time, that various alterations must yet be made in order to meet my ideas of a perfect School Dictionary; and that it would be my business, not to produce a mere translation of the work before me, but rather to take it as the basis of my projected book, and apply myself to the task of giving what I deemed a needful finish to the whole. Such is the course which I accordingly pursued; and, after much labour and attention, I have now the satisfaction of presenting a new Latin-English Dictionary to the notice of scholars and students, with the hope and expectation that they will find it not unworthy of their favour and acceptance.

The deficiencies and inaccuracies of the Latin-English Dictionaries which have hitherto been used in the course of education, are well known, and universally acknowledged. I have no taste, however, for the somewhat invidious employment of exposing these imperfections and errors: and I shall content myself with briefly detailing some of those points of excellence which contribute to the completeness and value of the work now put forward as a candidate for public approbation.

In this Dictionary, the most approved and established ORTHOGRAPHY has been adopted, and the QUANTITIES of syllables have been fully and carefully marked:—the ETYMOLOGY, where it is sufficiently ascertained, has been given as succinctly as possible; and it is hoped that these brief notices of the derivation and affinity of words will be found highly valuable, as exhibiting the results of the latest and soundest criticism on the subject:—the development and arrangement of MEANINGS has been brought to a state of extreme accuracy and precision, care having been taken to mark every distinction between meanings really different, and to avoid making needless divisions of meanings substantially the same:—SYNONYMS have been carefully classified and distinguished, and a list of them is given with a view to facilitate reference:—the various CONSTRUCTIONS of words have been noted and accurately distinguished; and it should be observed, that the examples adduced are for the most part intended to illustrate this point; and that they are to be regarded, in almost every instance, not merely as a selection of passages designed to exhibit and substantiate meanings, but rather as specimens of the use and construction of words in the significations under which they may be placed:—nor should I omit to add, that I have made it a constant rule to maintain in this book that moral PURITY AND DELICACY of word and sentiment, which, it is hoped, will be regarded as no unimportant feature in a work intended for the youth of a Christian nation. It will, I trust, be allowed that I did not say too much, when, in announcing the work as in course of publication, I asserted that, “as a school book, this is superior to all other Latin Dictionaries, in point of lucid arrangement, exactness of interpretation, the order and number of meanings assigned, careful and judicious reference to authorities, accurate distinction of Latin quantities, and attention to the purity of English idiom in the words used for explanation.”

A word or two must be said with regard to the extent of the Latin quotations, and the manner in which they are, for the most part, made. It is not the office of a Dictionary to serve as a phrase-book or clavis to the works of every author in a language; and it is obvious that a work which may be constructed upon such principles must be necessarily incomplete, especially if it be comprised within any moderate compass. In the present work, as I have already stated, the quotations are intended to illustrate the meanings, and to display the principal uses and constructions of words; and with this view, either short extracts have been made from the works of Latin authors, or merely the grammatical form of a sentence or the general turn of an expression has been given; while in cases which required no other illustration, only the names of authors have been appended. It will be found, I trust, on inspection, that, in these respects, succinctness of method has been combined with completeness of design.

* Lexicon Totius Latinitatis. A Dictionary of the Latin Language, originally compiled and illustrated with Explanations in German, by I. J. G. Scheller, revised and translated into English by J. E. Riddle, M. A. — Oxford, at the University Press, 1835, one vol., folio.

Incorrectness and imperfection must attend every effort to denote the qualities of words by different marks or signs. In this Dictionary, a general rule has been observed, that the authority of a good writer, wherever it can be had, is given to a word: and, since all the words are accompanied with the name of some one writer at least, it is evident that the inferior Latin is effectually distinguished from all other. As a guide in this matter, I have prefixed to the Dictionary a chronological list of Latin writers; and every student who may consult a work of this size and character, ought surely to obtain a good general acquaintance with the order in which these writers followed each other, and a knowledge of the comparative value of their several authorities with respect to the use of words.

Frequent references have been made to the works of modern critics. I have even made mention, in many instances, of works which exist only in the German language, under the impression that these books will eventually be accessible to a large number of English readers, either from their own acquaintance with that language, or from a future supply of translations. During the progress of this work, a translation of Buttman's Lexilogus, one of the works in question, has been announced.

I feel assured that it is needless to claim from British scholars and students a candid examination of such a work as this, together with all due indulgence to the translator, editor, and author: and it remains for me only to express my long-cherished hope and expectation, that this book will be universally accepted as a correct, complete, and systematic Dictionary of the Latin language, precisely adapted to the wants and use of Colleges and Schools.

ADVERTISEMENT

TO THE SECOND EDITION.

IN preparing a second Edition of this Dictionary, great pains have been taken to impart to it a finish which may assist its pretensions to general favour. The book has been carefully revised throughout;—errors, typographical and editorial, have been corrected;—the works of Freund and other recent Latin Lexicographers have been consulted, and the results of their investigations freely transferred to these pages;—the list of synonyms has been enlarged;—and other improvements have been made, involving an addition of twenty-four pages to the original bulk of the volume.

It is earnestly hoped that this augmentation of labour and expense will be rewarded by increased and permanent support; and that it will also be accepted as the author's best acknowledgment of patronage liberally bestowed upon his work, and of many encouraging communications which he has received from College Tutors. Heads of Public Schools, and other classical masters.

Ad, præp., expresses in general a close approach or the immediate proximity of two objects, without any notion of intermediate space; in the same manner as apud denotes a proximity with the idea of separation. It denotes, 1. A state of rest, and sometimes action, At or near any thing, to the question where? 1. Of place, At, near, by; alicui ad pedes jacere, Cic., to lie at the feet of any one; sedere ad latus, id.: ad dextram, ad sinistram, id.: ad manum esse, Liv., to be at hand: servum habuit ad manum, Cic.: esse ad urbem, said of magistrates with military command, before they went out to their provinces, Cic. Verr. 2, 6 & 8: Asson. in Act. 1, in Verr. 15 § 45: or after returning from them, if they claimed a triumph, Sall. Cat. 30; for it was unlawful for any one in actual command to enter the city: villa quæ est ad Baulos, Cic. We also frequently find ad in connections in which it is otherwise in use; ad forum, Plaut., (at) the court of justice: gratulationem ad omnia templa facere, Cic.: ad ædem Felicitatis, id., i. e. in the temple. For ad ædem we frequently find ad used elliptically with a genitive of the name of a deity; ad Apollinis, id.: ad Castoris, id.: ad Juturnæ, id. 2. Of persons, With; fuit ad me diu, id.: ad Cæsarem meam causam agas, Vatin. in Cic. Ep.: res plus famæ habitura ad posteros quam fidei, Liv. 2, 10: ad hostes bellum apparatur, id. II. The direction of a motion or action towards a place. 1. Prop. To, towards, to the question whether? legatos ad aliquem mittere, Cæs.: ad aliquem accedere, Cic.: ad meridiem spectare, id.: simulacrum ad orientem convertere, id. Thus also, ad Africam proficisci, Eutrop., where in would be more agreeable to common usage. Also Pliny says, petere aliquid ad aliquem, for petendi causa ire ad aliquem; e. g. myrrham petere ad Troglodytas, Plin. We also find ad with a genitive of the name of a deity, elliptically for ad ædem; e. g. ubi ad Dianæ veneris, Ter., when you shall have come to the temple of Diana: ventum erat ad Vestæ, Hor. If the object towards which a motion or action is directed is at the same time considered as the limit where this motion or action ceases, ad is rendered even to, up to, as far as; ab angulo castrorum ad flumen, Cæs. To this belongs also the phrase ad unum, with and without omnes, all to a man (inclusive), i. e. all together, without any exception; see UNUS. Again, ad nummum convenit, Cic., it agrees to a farthing; ad libellum, id., i. e. exactly; ad summum, id., at most. 2. Fig., to the question whereunto? to or for what? hostis ad manum venit, Liv., to an engagement; signa ad salutem, Ter., of health. III. Increase or addition to anything, To; annus, qui ad laborem tuum accessit, Cic. Hence, besides; ad cetera vulnera, id.: ad jus pontificum, id.: ad hoc, or ad id, Liv., moreover, besides this. IV. Decrease or diminution, To, down to; aquam ad tertiam partem decoquere, Varr. R. R. V. Destination, aim, purpose, For; canes ad venandum, Ter., hounds: milites ad naves, Liv., marines: Lygdamus ad cyathos, Prop., a cup-bearer: servus ad manum, a secretary, Cic.: ad contumeliam honorem dare, Cæs.: ad ludos pecunias decernere, Cic.: qui ad id missi erant, Liv. VI. Time in which any thing is or is done. 1. With the idea of approximation to a certain time, Not long before, towards, about, near; veni ad vesperum, id.: ad lucem dormitare, id., towards break of day, a little before day. 2. When it refers to a limit of time, At, on; te ad mensem Januariu expectamus, id.: venias ad id tempus, id., at that time; thus also ad diem dictam, id.: ad tempus venire, Liv.: at an appointed time; ad extremum, Cic., or ad postremum, Liv.: or, ad ultimum, id., i. e. at last, lastly. 3. Of a space of time after which any thing will be or happen, After; nescio quid intersit, utrum illic nunc veniam, an ad decem annos, Cic. 4. When the limit of an action or circumstance is denoted, To, until; Sophocles ad summam senectutem tragicodias fecit, id.: ad multam noctem vigilare, id.: ad ravum, till they are hoarse, Plaut. Aul. 2, 5, 10: ad satietatem trucidabit, Liv.: ad id, until now, till that, hitherto, id.: Tac.: ad tempus, for a time; perturbatio animi, quæ plerumque brevis est, et ad tempus, Cic. Off. 1, 8, i. e. temporary, transitory: ad breve, sc. tempus, Suet., for a short time. VII. Number, with the idea of approximation, About, to the number of; fumus ad ducentos, Cic. Here also ad is used without an accusative, and therefore adverbially: occisis ad hominum millibus quatuor, Cæs.; ad mille ducenti eo proelio ceciderunt, Liv. VIII. Relation or proportion, To; ut unum ad decem, sic decem ad centum, Quint., i. e. as one to ten, so, &c. IX. Occasion, cause, reason, On account of, on occasion of, upon, on; ad famam belli novas legiones scribere, Liv.: ad spem veniæ se dedere, id.: ad ducis casum percussa est multitudo, id.: ad edictum convenire, id.: ad summam ubertatem vini edixit, Suet.

X. Agreement or conformity, Agreeably to, according to, after; ad voluntatem loqui omnia, nihil ad veritatem, Cic.: ad numerum iudices non habuit, id., i. e. in a due or lawful number: ad verbum, id., literally, word for word: ad summam, id., in general: ad liquidum, Liv., i. e. liquide. XI. Comparison, In comparison of; nihil ad Persium, Cic.: quid ad primum consulatum secundus? Liv. XII. Respect to things or persons, relations, or circumstances, In respect of, with regard to, as to, and sometimes, in; ad omnia alia etate sapimus rectius, Ter., in all other things we think more accurately as we grow older: insignes ad laudem viri, Cic.: quod est ad communem salutem utilis, id.: obduruit animus ad dolorem novum, Cic. ad Div. 2, 16: nisi quid habes ad hæc, Cic., if you have nothing to say to the contrary: ad tempus, Cic. Planc. 30, according to the nature of the times or of circumstances. Hence of remedies or medicines, when it is equivalent to contra, For, against; oleum quo utuntur ad nervorum rigores, Plin. N. B. 1. Ad with its case is sometimes used for a dative; hunc ad carnificem dabo, Plaut.: sospites omnes ad propinquos restituit, Liv. 2. Later writers use ad instead of an ablative; labra deterges ad spongiam, Veget. 3. Ad is sometimes put after its case; quos ad, Cic.: especially where another word depends on the accusative; ripam ad Araxim, Tac. 4. Ad is sometimes connected by attraction with the pronoun of the following clause; nunc redeo ad quæ mihi mandas, Cic., for ad ea quæ cet.

To do, act, perform, manage, transact. ¹ To do, in the widest sense of the word, when it is said of all human actions; jucundi acti labores, Cic.: nihil agere, to do nothing, id.; to trouble one's self to no purpose, to labour in vain, id.: thus also, non multum, id., to effect little, to gain no advantage. But agere and facere differ, like 'to do' and 'to make,' ἄγειν and ποιεῖν, since agere is used of all actions of the body and the mind, facere only of works which are effected by the body (see Quint. 2, 118): hence agere and facere are placed together; id. But this distinction is not always observed, and agere is sometimes used for facere; e. g. latumque per agmen ardens limitem agit ferro, Virg.: hence, quid agis? Cic., how do you do? how are you? how do you find yourself? how goes it? thus also, quid agitur? Ter. The imperative age and agito are used adverbially; (a) by way of encouragement; Come! come on! go to! hearken! age, da veniam filio, Ter.: eja age, rumpe moras, Virg.: quare agite, o tectis juvenes succedite nostris, id.: we find also age, when several persons are addressed; nunc age, diva, præcipue nostro nunc adsirate labori, id.: hence, in digressions; nunc age, naturas apibus quas Jupiter ipse addidit, expediám, id. (b) In concessions; Well; age, veniam, Ter.: age, sit ita factum, Cic. (c) Also, with the particle dum appended to it; agedum hoc mi expedit primum, Ter., well then! answer me this first: agedetum, clamorem tollite hic, Liv. (d) In the same manner, age jam, age nunc, age sis (i. e. si vis), age vero, are used in digressions and concessions; Cic. Concerning the passive, observe, (a) Actum est, It is become of, or done with; de symbolis quid actum est? Ter., what is become of? what is done with? It means also, It is all over, for all is lost, all hope is gone, or, I am ruined; actum est: illicet, peristi, Ter.: actum jam de isto est, Cic.: thus also, acta hæc res est, Ter., it is all over, it is quite lost. (b) Actum agere, Ter.; or, acta agere, Cic.; or, rem actam agere, Liv., to do what has been already done, i. e. to take needless pains, to speak or act to no purpose. (c) Actum habere, Cic., To consider as done, i. e. to be content or satisfied with. (d) Acta, orum, Things which come to pass, i. e. events; belli, Suet.: pueritiae, Quint. ² To hold, carry on, conduct; censuram, Ov.: forum, Cic., to hold or conduct the assizes: triumphum, id.: prælium, Liv.: bellum, Cæs., to carry on a war; see GERERE: curam hospitii, Ov. ³ To manage, transact; Judaicum fiscum, Suet.: publicum quadragesimæ, id. ³ To express any thing by acting or by gesticulation, to express in a pantomimic manner the meaning of certain words; of stage-players; canticum, Liv.: versum, Cic.: thus also, to imitate or represent a person on the stage by voice and gesture; to act, play; Ballionem, id.: hence, fabulam agere, Ter., to act a play: thus also, primas partes, id.: and figi, priores partes, Cic., to act the first part: hence, ¹ In common life, To act or represent any thing, whether real or not; nobilem, Cœl. in Cic. Ep.: consulem, Plin. Pan.: non principem se, sed ministrum, Suet. ² Se, To behave; pro equite Romano, Suet.: sordide, Capitolin. 4. To speak any thing in public, whether before the senate, the people, or in a court of justice, because such speaking was accompanied by a lively motion of the body; quæ sic ab illo acta esse constabat, oculis, voce, gestu, inimici ut lacrimas tenere non possent, Cic.: equites Romani, apud quos tum iudices causa agebatur, id., the suit was brought: quum proxime res ageretur, Plin. Ep., on the next day for administering justice: hence, Acta, orum, Public acts or deeds, among the senate or the people, and of single magistrates; nisi res urbanas actaque omnia ad te perferri arbitraret, ipse perscriberem, id.: acta tui tribunatus, Cic.: acta Cæsaris, id., i. e. ordinances: Patrum acta componere, Tac.: in acta divi Augusta jurare, id.: hence, ¹ Acta publica, called also simply, acta, A register of the acts, laws, and ordinances of the senate and emperors; instituit, ut tam senatus quam populi diurna acta conferent et publicarentur, Suet.: in acta publica referre, id. ² Acta forensia, and simply, acta, Registers in which the sentences and decisions of judges were entered, pleas, legal reports or registers; Pand. (c) Acta militaria; called also simply, acta, Veget. de rem. From the forensic signification of agere are derived the two following forms of expression: (a) Causam alicujus agere, To take up the cause of any one, to defend his cause; Nep. Phoc. 3. (b) Res agitur, A thing is treated of, is at stake, or in danger; non nunc pecunia agitur, Ter.: agitur populi Rom. gloria, Cic.: aguntur vectigalia, id.: tua res agitur, paries quum proximus ardet, Hor. And, from the signification 'to speak,' ³ Alicui gratias agere, Cic., to return thanks. ⁵ To direct one's thoughts to a thing, to turn one's mind to, attend to; id ago sedulo, Ter., I seriously think of it: hocine agis, an non? id., are you attending to this? again, aliud agere, or, alias res agere, Cic., not to attend to a thing, but to turn one's thoughts another way, to mind something else: hence, id agere, to attend to a thing, to have a thing in view; Ter.: Cic. 6. Animam agere, to breathe one's last, Cœl. in Cic. Ep.

N. B. 1. The participle Agens is frequently used adjective and substantive, and signifies, ¹ Lively, animated, vigorous; orator, Cic., i. e. who, in speaking, knows how to move his body in a suitable manner; imagines agentes, id. ² An accuser, plaintiff; Pand. ³ A surveyor of land, Hyg. ⁴ Agens in rebus, An

It is also frequently repeated once or more often, and then signifies, at one time — at another; non — non; sometimes — sometimes; non potest quisquam alias beatus esse, alias miser, Cic.: thus it is used four times, Cic. Invent. 1, 52. Instead of the second alias, we sometimes find another particle of time, as, interdum, plerumque, aliquando; e. g. terra nunquam sine usura reddit, quod accepti, sed alias minore, plerumque majore cum fenore, Cic.: hence, alias alius, for alius hoc tempore, alius illo tempore; e.g. illi alias alius sentiunt, id., think at one time in one manner, at another in another; see ALIUS. II. Elsewhere, in another place; nusquam alias tam torrens fretum, Justin. III. Otherwise, as for the rest; pomum ipsum alias non manditur, Plin.: Homerus multus alias in admiratione Circes, id. IV. In another manner, for another reason, from another cause; non alias magis sua contumelia indoluisset Casarem ferunt, quam quod, &c., Tac.

ALIBI, adv. (alius and ibi) I. Elsewhere, i. e. in another place; Cic.: also with quam, than; Liv. II. Repeated once or more often, it signifies, at one place — at another; in this place — in that; here — there; alibi primum, alibi postremum agmen, alibi, &c., Liv.: i. e. in one place the vanguard — in another — in a third. II. Elsewhere, else, i. e. in alia re; Ter.: Liv. III. With alius it forms an abbreviation; jussit alios alibi fodere, Liv., i. e. some here — others there, &c.

ALIBILIS, ē. (alo) I. Nourishing, nutritive; Tac, Varr. II. That receives nourishment, or grows by the use of food; pulli alibiliores fiunt, Varr.

ALIENITAS, ātis. f. (alienus) I. An unnatural state of the body, when it is filled with things which inconnode it; Cæl. Aur. II. i. q. Alienatio, e. g. mentis, loss of reason, madness, id.

ALIENO, āvi, ātum, āre. (alienus) To estrange, alienate, i. e. to cause any thing which was the property of ourselves to belong to another; hence, I. To alienate, transfer, by sale, &c.; bona sua, Cic. II. To estrange; nos alienavit, Ter.: suspicione alienatum, Sall. III. Gen. To separate, divide, remove; alienatis a memoria periculi animis, Liv., since their minds were averse from any recollection of danger; hence, Alienari, To separate itself, be lost; oppida alienata, Nep., i. e. that have become subject to a different master, lost: provincia, Liv., i. e. lost.

IV. To alienate the affections of any one, to render averse, to set at variance; aliequem sibi, Liv.: bonos a se, Cic.: voluntatem alieuius a se, id.: hence, Alienatus, a, um, Averse; animus, id. V. To alter, change; Plaut.: hence, I. Mentem alieuius, to take away the senses, to derange, Liv.: mens alienata, id., madness, derangement; thus also, alienari mente, Gell., to be out of one's mind. 2. Alienari, To be beside one's self, to be transported, e. g. with anger, lust, &c.; Liv. 3. 48: alienatus sensibus, id.; or, ab sensu, id., i. e. unfeeling, lost to feeling. 3. To kill, to take away feeling; odor sulphuris alienat, Sen.: instestina alienantur, Cels.

ALIENUS, a, um. (alius) I. Strange, foreign, i. e. that belongs to another, or, that is derived from another; res, Cic.: mos, id.: pavor alienus, Liv., i. e. aliorum: Alienum, That which is not our own; appetens alieni, Sall.: largiri de alieno, Cic.: hence, as alienum, debts, id.; see ÆS. II. Strange, i. e. that does not belong to our family and acquaintance, not related to us; Plaut.: neque amicis neque alienioribus, Cic.: alienissimi a Clodio, id., i. e. not in the least related to: non alienus sanguine regibus, Liv.

III. Alienated, removed; Ter. IV. Indisposed to, averse from; ab aliquo, Cic.: also with a genitive and dative; consilii, Sall.: joci, Ov.: ambitioni, Sen. V. Unsuitable, incongruous, inconsistent, disadvantageous, contrary; tempus, Cic.: ætas, Ter. It takes after it, I. a, e. g. a dignitate, Cic. 2. The ablative; dignitate, Cic. 3. The dative; illi cause, Cic. 4. The genitive; dignitatis, Cic. VI. Intended for another; vulnus, Virg. VII.

Corrupt, dead; Scrib. Larg. VIII. Strange in a thing, inexperienced; a literis, Cic. IX. Free, exempt; e. g. from taxes, Cod. Theod.

ALIGER, a, um. (ala and gero) That has wings, winged; Virg.

ALIMENTĀRIUS, a, um. (alimentum) Belonging to or concerned with nourishment; lex, Cæl. in Cic. Ep., i. e. relating to the division of corn among the poorer citizens.

ALIMENTUM, i. n. (alo) Nutrimnt, nourishment, sustenance; Cic.: also fig., flamma, Ov.: fama, Tac.

ALIMON, i. n. (ἀλίμον) A kind of shrub-like spinach; Plin. (Atriplex Halimus, L.).

ALIMŌNIA, æ. f. (alo) Maintenance, nutriment; Suet.

ALIO, adv. (alius) I. Elsewhither, i. e. 1. To another place; Cic. 2. To another person or persons; Cic. 3. To another thing; Cic. II. To another purpose or end; Cic.

ALIOQUI, or ALIOQUIN, adv. I. Otherwise, i. e. other respects, on other accounts, for the rest; Liv.: Hor.: Suet. II. Otherwise, else, in any other case; Cic.: Tac. III. Moreover, besides; Plin. Ep.

ALIORUM, and ALIORUS (for alioversum, &c.), adv. I. Elsewhither, i. e. 1. To another place; Plaut.: Gell. 2. To another thing; Gell. 3. To another person; Gell. II. In a different sense; aliorum accipere, Ter., to put a different construction on a thing, to take it differently.

ALIOVERSUM (Alioversum), and ALIOVERSUS (Alioversus), adv. I. Elsewhither. II. With a different respect, in a different meaning; Plaut.: Lact.

ALIPES, edis. (ala and pes) I. Having wings on the feet; deus alipes, and simply, Alipes, i. e. Mercurius, Ov.

II. Quick-footed, fleet; Lucr.: equi, Virg.: also simply, Alipedes, i. e. equi, Virg.

ALIPILUS, i. m. (ala and pilus) One that plucks the hair from the armpits of persons bathing; Sen.

ALIPTES, or ALIPTA, æ. m. (ἀλιπτης) One who anoints, one who practises the art of rubbing in unguents, to impart vigour and suppleness to the limbs; Cic. Lat., Uncutor.

ALIQŪA, sc. via, ratione. In some way or other.

ALIQŪANDU, i. q. Aliquantum.

ALIQŪANMŪLTUS, or ALIQŪAM (sc. partem) MŪLTUS, a, um. Considerable in quantity, pretty much; vestrum aliquid multi, Cic.: aliquid multum temporis, Apul.: Aliquid multum, adv. In a considerable degree, considerably; Apul.

ALIQŪANPLŪRES (Aliquid plures). Considerably more; Tert.

ALIQŪANDIU (Aliquid diu), adv. For a while, for some time; Cic.

ALIQŪANDO, adv. (alius and quando) I. Once, i. e. at some indefinite time. 1. Of future time; Some time or other, in time to come; illucescet aliquando ille dies, Cic. 2. Of past time; Once, formerly; aliquando defuisset, Cic.: it may also be rendered, sometimes, occasionally; id. II. At length, at last, when tandem is either with it or is to be supplied; both may be found in Cicero.

N.B. Aliquando differs from quondam in the same manner as aliquid from quidam; quondam means 'at a certain time,' but does not define at what time; aliquando, 'once,' only in a supposed case, which is not really known; as, exstittit quondam, but, puto aliquando exstittisse.

ALIQŪANTILLUS, a, um. (dimin. of aliquantum) Very little: Aliquantillum, A very little, a little bit; Plaut.

ALIQŪANTISPER, adv. For a little while, for some time; Ter.

ALIQŪANTO. See ALIQŪANTUS.

ALIQŪANTŪLUM. See ALIQŪANTULUS.

ALIQŪANTŪLUS, a, um. (aliquantum) Little, small; numerus, Auct. B. Afr.: hence, Aliquantulum, subst., A little; suspiciosus, Cic.: æris alieni, id.: also adv., A little, a little bit; progređi, id.: tristis, Ter.: also with a compar.; e.g. aliquantum avidior, Ter.: for this we find also aliquantulo; e. g. tristior, Vopisc.

ALIQŪANTUS, a, um. (alius and quantus) I. Tolerable, or, some, i. e. not little, not small, not few; numerus, Sall.: iter, Liv.: spatium, id.: especially, we find the neuter Aliquantum, substantive; A little, somewhat, a tolerable portion; laudis, Cic.: noctis, id.: that aliquantum signifies more than paullum, and less than multum, is seen from Cic. Quint. 12, and Cic. Tusc. 5, 6: but it means also, in Plautus, a little; Trin. 3. 1, 24: hence Aliquantum, adv., Somewhat, not a little; acquiescere, Cic.: also with a compar.; e. g. iniquior, Ter.: thus also, alii, aliquanto, somehow, considerably; intra legem et quidem aliquanto, Cic.: especially with comparatives and particles of time; aliquanto plus, id.: prius, id.: aliquanto post, id.: or, postea aliquanto, id.: aliquanto ante, id. II. Aliquot, æ, a, for aliquot, Some; oppida, Eutrop.: dies, Pallad.

ALIQŪATĒNUS, or ALIQUA TENUS. (sc. parte) Partly, in some measure, to a certain degree; Plin.: Quint.

ALIQŪI for ALIQUIS and ALIQUO. See ALIQUIS.

ALIQŪIS (or ALIQUI), aliqua, aliquod, and aliquid (for alius quis). I. One, any one, some one, somebody; ali-quis homo, or simply, aliquis, a person, or, somebody; res aliqua, something; negotium aliquod, some business; plural, aliqui, some; aliquem amicum, Ter.: aliquis ex vobis, Cic.: aliquem de tuis, id.: aliquem meorum, id.: trium rerum aliqua consequetur, id.: dolor aliquis, id. With adjectives it is frequently used in such a manner as to appear redundant; majorem aliquam esse causam, Cic.: unus aliquis, id. N.B. 1. Aliquod is always used adjectivè; e.g. aliquod odium, Cic.: but aliud always substantivè; and hence it takes a genitive; e.g. of a substantive, monstri, Ter.: or of an adjective of the second declension neuter gender; aliquod boni, pulchri, &c.: but we also find this adjective in the same case; aliud extremum, Cic. 2. Very frequently, particularly after si, ne, quo, quanto, the ali- is omitted, as in si quis, si ejus, &c.; but it often remains; si aliquem, Cic. 3. For Nomin. aliquis, we find also aliqui; e.g. annularius aliqui, Cic. 4. For Abl. aliquo, we find also aliud, Plaut.: hence, si qui for-si qua (sc. ratione), Liv. 3, 64, ed. Drak., i.e. if perchance. 5. Aliquis with the plural; aliquis aperite, Ter., i.e. open, somebody. 6. Aliquid, Something, i.e. a thing of some importance, of some consideration, no trifle; est aliquid, it is no trifle, it is worth consideration, Cic.: dicere aliquid, id.: esse aliquid Manes et subterranea regna, nec pueri credunt, Juv., i.e. to deserve credit or attention: thus also, si vis esse aliquid, id., i.e. to be valued or esteemed. 7. Unus redundantly before aliquis; see above. 8. With numbers, About, near, some; tres aliqui aut quatuor, Cic.: aliqua folia quinque, Varr. 9. Aliqua, for aliqua via; see ALIQUA. Aliqua tenus (sc. parte, or ratione), or aliquatenus; see ALIQUATENUS. 10. Aliquam, sc. partem, Somewhat, pretty; aliquam multi, &c.; see ALIQUAMMULTUS. 11. Aliquo, Somewhat, to some place; see ALIQUO. 12. Aliquid, in some measure; tibi succensere aliquid, Cic.: hence, si quid, if in some measure, Virg.: nisi quid, unless in some measure, Cic. 11. Tolerable, passable, of some consequence or weight; aliquo statu reip., Cic.: aliqua republica, id., i.e. in some tolerable or passable condition of the state. 111. For aliquis quis, Some other; ira aut aliqua perturbatione, Cic. 1V. Many a one, this and that, like the Greek τις; dixerat aliquis leniorem sententiam, Cæs.: est aliquis, qui se inspicit, aestimari fastidiat, Liv. 6, 41. N.B. 1. Aliqui, trisyll. Ov.: Tibull. 2. Aliquis implies supposition, quidam, reality. If I say quidam scripsit, I mean definitely that some one has written, though I know not who, or do not choose to mention him; but if I say aliquis, some one or other, I do not even know whether the case has happened. Hence aliquis is always used of any thing indefinite, as, scribere aliquid.

ALIQUISPIAM, aliquispiam, aliquodpiam and aliqidpiam. Some one, any one; some, one, &c.; aliquispiam vi, Cic.: aliqidpiam membrum, id.

ALIQUISQUAM, aliquisquam, aliqidquod and aliqidquam; i. q. Aliquispiam, Liv.

ALIQUO, adv. 1. Somewhat, to some place; Ter.: also with terrarum, Brut. in Cic. Ep. ad Div.: hence, si quo (for aliquo) misit, Cic. 1I. For any purpose whatever; si quo — opera opus esset, Liv.

ALIQUOT, Numer. indecl. Some, several; epistole, Cic. ALIQUOTARIAM, adv. In some places; Varr.

ALIQUOTIES, adv. Some times, several times, certain times; Cic.

ALIQUOTVERSUM (vorsum), adv. One way or other; Plaut.

ALIS, an old form for alius, and ALID for aliud; e.g. alis, Catull.: alid, Lucr.

ALISMA, ātis, n. (ἀλίσμα) A kind of aquatic herb, water plantain; Plin. (Alisma Plantago, L.)

ALITER, adv. (from the obsolete alis, i.e. alius) 1. Otherwise, in another manner; Cic. N.B. 1. It is also followed by the particles quam, et, ac, atque, i.e. than; aliter, quam velim, Cic.: aliter ad te scripsit et ad matrem, id.: aliter ac, id.: Nep.: aliter atque, Ter.: also, non aliter nisi, &c., Liv., not otherwise than if. 2. It is also repeated; aliter cum tyranno, aliter cum amico vivitur, Cic.: aliter atque aliter, Suet.; or aliter alterque, Cels., i.e. in different ways. 3. Also with longè, far; multo, by much; nihilo, not at all; longe aliter, Cic.: multo aliter, Nep.: nihilo aliter, Ter. 4. It is also used for alius, a, ud; e.g. nihilo sum aliter ac fui, Ter. 1I. Otherwise, else, contrariwise; Cic. 111. Moreover, besides; Suet.

ALITRO, ōris, See ALTRO.

ALITURA, æ, f. (alo) A nourishing, giving of sustenance; Gell.

ALITUS, a, um. See ALO.

ALIUBI, adv. Elsewhere, in another place; Plin. N.B. 1. Aliubi — aliubi, in one place — in another; here — there; aliubi redeat, aliubi, &c., Varr. 2. Aliubi atque aliubi, In different places; Sen.: Plin.

ALIUM, See ALLIUM.

ALIUNDE, adv. 1. From another place; Plin. 1I. From another thing; Cic. 111. From another person; Cic. N.B. With alius; e.g. alii aliunde coibant, Liv., i.e. one from one place, one from another: alius aliunde est periculum, Ter.

ALIUS, a, ud. 1. Another, other, i.e. different from any thing; alius ver erat, Liv.: aliud est maledicere, aliud accusare, Cic., it is one thing — it is another; hence, alio die, a form used by the augurs when they desired to put off the Comitia, and gave out that they had seen a bad omen, id., i.e. (the matter must not be brought forward to-day, but) on some other day. N.B. 1. It is frequently repeated several times, when it means (if it be not similar to the above passage, aliud est maledicere, aliud accusare), the one — the other, or one — another; aliud alio melius, Cic., one better than another: aliud ex alio, id., one after another: ut ipsi alii alius prodesse possent, id., i.e. one another: alia atque alia loca, Liv., i.e. this and that, various, one and another, one after another. This repetition often serves for distribution; proferebant alii purpuram, thus alii, gemmas alii, Cic., i.e. some — others — others: alius pronuntiat, alius contendit, Cæs.: but in this case there is no necessity for a bare reduplication; we find also, alias — alias — quasdam, Cic.: alii — quidam, Liv.: pars — alii, Sall.: alii — pars, Sall. Sometimes it is entirely omitted in one clause; virgis cædi (alii) alii securi subijci, Liv.: we find also aliud — aliud, for partim — partim, Cic. Att. 12, 40. 2. Especially, alius with a second alio, or with the particles alio or aliorum, alibi, aliunde, aliter, alias, forming an agreeable abbreviation; aliud alii muneratur, Cic., presents one with this, another with that: alius alia via, Liv., one in this way, another in that: aliud alio dissipavit, one hither, one thither, Cic.: jussit alios alibi fodere, Liv.: alii aliunde coibant, id., some from one place, some from another; aliter cum alio loqui, Cic., one way with some, and another with others: illi alius aliud sentiunt, id., now this, now that. 3. Often with longè, far, quite; longe alia, Cic. 4. It is frequently followed by the particles ac, atque, at, quam, i.e. than; longe alia ac tu scribis, Cic.: alius essem, atque nunc sum, id.: lux longe alia et solis et lychnorum, id.: alia quam, Plin. Ep.: aliud quam, Liv.: nihil aliud quam, Cic.; for which we also frequently find nihil aliud nisi; id. It is also sometimes followed by an abl. for quam; e.g. nec quicquam aliud libertate quaesisse, Cass. in Cic. Ep.: alius Lysippo, Hor.: we sometimes find alius, a, ud, repeated; aliud est maledicere, aliud accusare, Cic.; see ad init. 5. Alium facere aliquem, To make different, to alter, change; Plaut.: hence, homines alii facti sunt, Cic., i.e. have become quite different, have changed. 6. Aliud agere, to have something else to do, and so, not to have time for any thing; Cic. Orat. 26: it also means, to be thinking on something else, and so, not to pay attention to any thing (which is spoken or shown); Cic. Cluent. 64: for which we find also, alias res agere, Cic. 7. In alia omnia ire, Cic.; or discedere, id.; or transire, Hirt., to be of a contrary side or opinion (in the Roman senate), prop., to go over to any thing else. 8. Aliud is also used with a gen.; aliud commodi, Cic.: aliud præcipui, id.; observe especially the phrase, nihil aliud quam, for tantum, only; nihil aliud quam in populationibus res fuit, Liv.: thus also, non aliud quam, Ov. 9. Alius is used when several or all are spoken of; alter, when the subject is of two: but we find also alius of two; alius super alium, Liv. 1, 25: also, for secundus or alter, The other, second; unam — aliam — tertiam, &c., Cæs. B. G. 1, 1. 1I. The other, i.e. the rest, remainder (for reliquus); alia acies, Liv.: aliud vulgus, id. N.B. 1. The gen. is alius, and dat. alii; but we find also gen. alii and alia; e.g. ad alii dei arma, Varr.: alia pecudis, Cic.: alia partem, Liv.: 1. and dat. alia, Plaut.: Gell. 2. Alia, sc. via, Liv.

ALIUSMODI, i.e. alius modi. Of another kind; Cic.

ALIUSVIV, aliäviv, aliudviv, i.e. quivis alius. Any one else; Cic.

ANTE, (from Ævnt) I. Adv. 1. Of place, Before, in front; post me erat Ægina, ante Megara, Sulpic. in Cic. Ep.: also, forwards; ingredi, Cic. 2. Of time, Before, previously; ante ad te falsum scripseram, Cic.: also with various adverbs or ablatives; longe ante videre, Cic., long before: multo ante, Ter.: or, ante multo, Cic.: aliquanto ante, id.: paulo ante, id.: paucis mensibus ante, Cæs.: quadruduo ante, Cic.: ante annis octo, Liv.—Ante is frequently followed by quam, and these two words are sometimes separated, sometimes joined in signification, in which latter case they ought perhaps to be written together (antequam). 1. Before that, before, sooner than; ut te ante videret, quam a vita discederet, Cic.: veniam ante, quam plane ex animo tuo effluis, id.: antequam de incommodis dico, id.: anno ante, quam mortuus est, id. Also, quam ante, for ante quam, Lucr. 2. Until; neque defatigabor ante, quam percepero, Cic.: nec ante nos hinc moverimus, quam Patres acciverent, Liv. 3. First, in the first place, followed by deinde; e. g. ante tonderi convenit, deinde, &c., Cels. 4. Formerly, in ancient times; Ov. Fast. 1, 337. 5. It is sometimes used as an adjective; ante mala, Virg., previous ills. II. Præpos. 1. Before, of place, as opposed to 'after' or 'behind'; ante pedes, Cic.: ante oppidum, id.: aliquid vinctum ante se agere, Nep. 2. Before, of time; qui honos habitus ante me est nemini, Cic., i. e. before my time. Also, with adverbs of time; paulo ante lucem, Sulpic. in Cic. Ep.: multo ante noctem, Liv.: it is also followed by quam; e. g. ante paucos, quam periret, menses, Suet. It is also sometimes put after its case, especially after the cases of qui; e. g. diem statuo, quam ante, &c. Cic. Observe, 1. Ante tempus, ante diem, mean sometimes, before the proper time; ante tempus mori, Cic.: ante diem patrios inquiri in annos, Ov. 2. Autē certam diem, before the expiration of a certain day; equites ante certam diem decederent, Cic.: ante quem diem iturus sit. Cæs.: hence, 3. Ante diem, with the day of the month, i. q. die; e. g. a. d. viii Calendas Decembres, Cic., i. e. ante diem octavum ante Cal. Decemb., for die octavo, &c. Hence the Romans use in ante diem, for in diem, on the day; and ex ante diem, for ex die, from the day; Cic., Ep. ad Att. 1, 16; 3, 17: Liv. 45, 2. Hence, Inante, gen. ante; see INANTE. 3. Gen. Before, denoting preference, when it may be rendered above, beyond; ante Alexandrum esse, Liv.: ante omnia, before all things, principally, id.: also after a compar. and superl.; e. g. scelerē, ante alios immanior omnes, Virg.: unus ante alios fuit carissimus, Nep.

AUSUM, i. and AUSUS, a, um. See AUDEO.

AUT. conj. (from αὐτός, again) I. Or; autendum est aliquid universis, aut omnia singulis patienda, Liv.: hence, aut — aut, either — or; aut bibat aut a'beat, Cic.: it is sometimes repeated several times; Cic. Off. 1, 9: Lucr. 4, 933: it is also used with vero, certe, or etiam, Cic. N.B. 1. For aut — aut, we find also vel — aut, Cic.: or, aut — vel, Mart. 2. Aut — aut, for partim — partim, Liv. 44, 6. 3. Aut differs from vel in the following manner: aut disjoins things opposed to each other (res diversae); vel, only varieties of the same things (res variae); words separated by aut cannot stand together, which words separated by vel might very well do. But the distinction in this rule is not always carefully observed by the ancients. The following is a very clear example: Cic. Senect. 16, ubi potest illa aetas aut calescere, vel aplicatione melius, vel igni; aut vicissim umbræ aquisve refrigerari salubrius? II. Else, otherwise, i. q. Alioquin; Or. Met. 10, 52: Virg. Æn. 10, 630: Quint. 1, 12, 6. III. Sometimes for an, e. g. cœnæ causa aut tuzæ mercedis gratia, Plaut.: quem invocabo? hunc aut illum? Sen. IV. Sometimes it diminishes the signification, Or rather, or at least; cuncti, aut magna pars, Sall.: obrue puppes, aut age diversos, Varr. V. Sometimes it connects; ter aut quater, for terque quaterque, Virg.

VI. Sometimes for nec, when preceded by a negative; neque paci aut prelio paratus, Tac.

AUTEM, conj. (from αὐτός, again) I. Also, likewise; agite, abite, tu domum, et tu autem domum, Plaut., and you too go home: venit hic clitelas, venit hic autem alter senex, id. II. But, on the other hand, when several things which differ from each other are mentioned together; Æschinus odiose cessat: prandium corruptitur: Ctesiphon autem in amore est totus, Ter.: est finitimus oratori poëta, numeris astrictior paulo, verborum autem licentia liberior, Cic. N.B. 1. It is frequently put after several words; quæ res te sollicitat autem? Ter. 2. It is seldom found after neque or nec, the phrase neque vero being more usual; neque autem ego sum ita demens, Cic. 3. It is sometimes put after et; e. g. et adire lubet hominem, et autem nimis eum ausculto libens, Plaut. This is less harsh, if a word occur between; et caprifici autem, &c., Plin. 4. We find also, adeo autem, ecce autem, porro autem, tum autem, Ter. 5. It is sometimes redundant; sed quid ego hæc autem nequiquam ingrata revolvo? Virg. III. But, now, in stylistic forms; Cic. Acad. 4, 30. IV. When a speaker corrects himself, Do I say, what do I say? quid in republica fiat: fiat autem? imo vero etiam quid futurum sit, Cic.

V. When one expresses surprise at, or blames, what another has said; ego non tangam meam? Ch. tuam autem, furcifer? Ter., yours, do you say?

CÆLO, ãvi, ãtum, ãre. (from cælum) I. Seems originally to have been applied to the art of working figures in basso rilievo or flat sculpture upon a ground of wood and other hard substances, by means of the chisel. Thus Pliny uses it of basso rilievo in marble, as on the Mausoleum, 36, 9. In this sense Virgill also seems to have called a bowl made of beech wood, cælatum opus Alcimedontis. To this also Festus alludes, when he says, Ancæsa dicta sunt ab antiquis vasa, quæ cælata appellamus, quod circumcædendo talia fiunt. Diaglyphic sculpture is never meant by it. II. In later times it came to denote principally the art of casting figures in metal, and of bas relief work in gold, silver, and bronze; whereas sculpere or sculperè was used of work in wood, stone, ivory, and other hard materials; hence, 1. To form or represent any thing in bas relief or flat sculpture; centaurs cælati in scyphis, Plin.: in capulo gladii quadrigam habuit cælatum, Val. Max. 2. To ornament with figures in bas relief, to emboss; scuta argento, auro cælarè, Liv.: vasa cælata, Cic.: cælata, cælatum argentum, id.

CENSOR, ōris, m. (censio) Prop. A taxer, valuer, assessor; hence, I. A censor, i. e. a magistrate at Rome, elected every five years, to whom each citizen was obliged to make a return of his name, family, and property. He had also to inspect the manners of the citizens; could remove any, for mismanagement of their property, or for any other error of conduct, from a rustic into a city tribe (ex rustica in urbanam), or could even place them among the ærarii or caritēs. He could deprive senators of their seat in the house (senatu movere), take away a knight's horse (equum adicere, sc. publicum), i. e. degrade such from their rank. He also leased out the public revenues, &c. There were always two censors, and persons of the highest respectability were chosen to the office: their power lasted only a year and a half. There were also censors in other places; e. g. in Sicily, Cic. II. Fig. A censor, critic, censorer; Hor.
