CORŪLA, æ. f. (dimin. of corona) A little crown, a chaplet; Plaut.: Propert.: Plin.

CORŪLLĀRIUS, a, um. (corolla) Of or belonging to garlands: hence, Corollarium, sc. donum, and sometimes argentum (money). 1. A present consisting of a garland; and so, a garland for a present; thus perhaps it is, Plin. 21, 3; such garlands were given to various persons, as actors, &c., in token of approbation; afterwards, money was given instead: hence, II. A present in money instead of a garland. III. Gen. Any present received over and above the customary remuneration; a douceur, gratuity, bonus; Cic.: fig., an additional inference, a corollary; Arnob.

CORONA, æ. f. (κορώνη) I. A wreath, garland; Cic.: Such used to be worn, 1. by persons at a banquet; Cic.: and by others, on occasions of public rejoicing; id.: at sacrifices; Virg. 2. A garland was proposed as a prize to combatants, Suet.: cf. Weber ad Juvenal. 6, 320. 3. A garland was given as a reward; in which sense it may sometimes be rendered, crown; e. g. triumphalis, for a general at a triumph, which was a wreath of laurel; civica, for having saved the life of a citizen in battle, a garland of oak leaves; vallis, for the first that penetrated the rampart of an enemy; muralis, for the first who scaled a wall; castrensis, for the first who entered an enemy's camp; navalis, for the first who boarded an enemy's ship; obdionalis, for the general who delivered Rome from a blockade; also, aurea, either, for a general celebrating a triumph, or, for any person who had shown extraordinary valour in battle; Liv.: such were sometimes presented to deities; e. g. to Jupiter, id.: hence for, Reward; Virg.: crowns were also placed on corpses or borne before them; Cic. 4. Probably garlands were placed also on prisoners of war who were to be sold as slaves: as Herzog (ad Cæs. B. G. 3, 16) very reasonably supposes, because they were frequently equal in value and shared a similar fate; cf. Gell. N. A. 7, 4; hence, sub corona vendere, Cæs., to sell as a slave; and, venire, Liv., to be sold as a slave. II. The name of two constellations; 1. One in the northern hemisphere, called also Cressa, or Gnossia corona, because placed in the heavens by Bacchus in honour of Ariadne; Virg.: Ov.: Manil. 2. In the southern hemisphere: est et sine honore corona, German. III. Any thing round like a wreath, or that encircles a thing as a wreath does the head; hence, 1. Corona circuli, Liv., i. e. a round hole. 2. CULTUS, us, m. (colo) I. A tending, taking care of, cultivation of a thing. I. Of agriculture and grazing; cultus agri, Liv.; or, agricolæ, id., i. e. agriculture, husbandry: cultus gregis, Calp., i. e. care: purum ab humano cultu solum, Liv. 2. Fig. Cultivation, when it may frequently be rendered, attention paid to any thing, instruction, improvement, education, &c.; animi, Cic.: corporis, id.: literarum, Gell.: ingenii, id.: malo cultu corruptus, Cic.: humili cultu educare, Liv.: cultus provincie, Cæs., for homines culti, persons of cultivated or polished manners. II. Cultus is said of every thing belonging to the support of life, and hence denotes. Dwelling, victuals, clothing, and every thing necessary to a domestic establishment, of which it is to be observed, that it is rarely placed alone, but usually with a synonym, when cultus denotes every thing not comprehended in that synonym; victus atque cultus, Nep., i. e. victuals and drink, and every other necessary of life: victus et cultus, Cæs.: habitus et cultus, Suet.: cultus vestitusque, Nep.: disciplina cultusque, Suet., i. e. military discipline and equipment: especially, splendour in clothing and expensive furniture; regius, Nep.: muliebris, Plin.: domesticus, Nep., elegance in the household establishment, such as neatness and affluence demand: cultus mercatus, Propert., purchased elegancies: cultus triumphi, Vell., i. e. magnificent preparations: cultus amœnior, Liv., i. e. elegance in clothing. III. A manner or style of living; quotidianus, Nep.: humanus, Cic. IV. Esteem, regard, worship, reverence, adoration; alicui cultum tribuere, Cic.

CŪLULUS, i. m. A kind of drinking-vessel; Hor.

CŪLUS, i. m. The fundament; Catull.

CUM, or QUUM. See QUUM.

CŪM, præp. (from σύν, σύν, σύν, but at the same time also in the signification of ἀμα and μετὰ τινος, or simply, τινί) expresses in general a being together, an accompanying, and is used of persons, of things and ideas: its radical signification is With, opposed to sine, 'without'; and hence it may be exchanged with non sine, as in Hor. Od. 3, 4, 20, non sine Dis animosus infans. Hence,

1. In connection with, in common with; σύν, or simply, τινί. I. Of actions common to the two parties concerned, With, together with; ire cum amica, Ter.: egredi cum copiis, Liv.: but, especially of a going forth with soldiers, when an adjective (or pronoun) is joined to the ablative, cum is frequently omitted; obvius fit nulla rhœda, nullis comitibus, Cic.: egredi omnibus copiis, Liv. 2. In a friendly acceptance; cum Patrono mihi omnia sunt, Cic., I am on the most friendly terms with: est mihi cum aliquo aliquid, or nihil, I am, or, am not, connected with any one, id.: quid mihi cum re? what is the thing to me? what have I to do with it? id.: congruere cum natura, id., i. q. nature: hence also, On the side or party of any one; consentire cum aliquo, to be of the same opinion with one, id.: facere cum aliquo, id., to hold with any one, be on his side, σύν τινί εἶναι. 3. In a hostile acceptance, With, i. q. Against; pugnare cum hoste, Cic., μάχασθαι τινί: habere controversiam cum aliquo, id.: nihil cum potiore juris humani relinquere inopi, Liv., i. e. against the more powerful: to this belongs also, queri, querelæ cum aliquo, Cic., i. e. complaints of or against any one: orationem habere cum multitudinē, id., i. e. to address to: dissidere, distractum esse cum aliquo, id.: in these connections cum is synonymous with de, ad, and a (ab), but with this difference, that cum denotes a mutual interchange, while de, ad, and a, represent the one object as passive, the other as active. II. In company with, together with, along with, ἀμα. I. Of persons, With, among; ad mille hominum, cum his Sempronio Blæso quaestore, amissum, Liv., i. e. with or among these: in this case, with prose writers, rarely with poets, cum is often used directly for et, as in for et; e. g. negaretis hoc mihi cum Diis, i. e. mihi et Diis, Liv.: Liber pater et cum Castore Pollux, Hor.: in connections such as, dux cum principibus captiurum, Liv.; Demosthenes cum ceteris sunt expulsi, Nep.; Boecus cum pedibus invadunt, Sall., the radical signification 'with' may however be retained. 2. Of things, Furnished, provided, equipped, clothed, endowed with any thing; or simply, with, also, in; homo cum sica inventus, Cic., Gr. ἐν δαυεῖ; sedere cum tunica, Cic., i. e. in: porcus cum humano capite, Liv.: ager effer cum octavo, cum decimo, Cic., produces eightfold, tenfold: esse cum imperio, id., to have unlimited power (used especially of those who were sent out from the Roman state with an army into a province, when it signifies, to have the chief command); whereas esse in imperio, id., is, to fill one of the higher offices of state (by virtue of which one enjoys a degree of power): 'cum' expresses that a person is furnished with unlimited power by the state, 'in' that the power is connected with the office; a consul was by virtue of office in imperio, but not cum imperio; this must first be committed to him by the state. 3. Of contemporaneity, With, at, after, upon; cum prima luce, Cic., with the dawn: cum primo sole, id., with or at sunrise, ἐν ἡλίῳ ἀνιόντι; cum his (scilicet dictis) redit, id., after, upon these words: venire cum febril, id.: cum ubertate soli laborare contendunt, Tac., i. e. with the fruitfulness of the soil: therefore also of contemporary operations and effects, with, to, ἄνευ, i. e. not without; cum voluptate audire, Cic.: cum cruciati necare, Cæs., with torture: magno cum genui civitatis, Cic., to the great sorrow, so that great sorrow is the consequence: magno cum periculo, Cæs., not without great danger: to this belongs also the circumlocution of the adverb by cum and a substantive; cum bona gratia, Cic., i. e. benigne: cum cura, Liv., i. e. diligent: cum silentio in forum ducti, id., i. e. tacite, clandestine; but, cum silentio auditi sunt, id., i. e. benigne: lastly, to this belongs the phrase, cum eo, with, on, or under the condition that, provided that, yet so; with ut; id.: or, ne, Colum.; Cels.: or, quod, Cic.: cum eo, quod, means also, besides that; Scrib. Larg. III. Of concomitant operation and participation, ἡσρά. I. In league or alliance with, together with, with; societatem habere cum aliquo, Cic.: adversus regem bellum gereret, cum Ægyptiis, Nep., i. e. in alliance with. 2. Under the superintendance or command of, with, under; legiones, quas cum Titurio miserat, Cæs., under (so that Titurius is the chief person) and together with Titurius: reliquos cum custodibus in ædem Concordiæ venire jubet, Sall., under guard of. In Cic., Ov., Liv., and Nep., cum is usually placed before the relative pronoun, more rarely after it; e. g. quibuscum, quicum (or quocum), Cic.; but it is always subjoined to the personal pronouns; therefore, necum, tecum, nobiscum, vobiscum. CUMATILIS (Cym.), e. (from κύμα, a wave) Sea-green, water coloured; Plaut. CUMBA. See CYMBA. CUMCUNQUE, i. e. quandocunque; Lucr. CUMÆRA, æ. f. A tub or chest; e. g. for keeping corn in, Hor. CUMINÆTUS (Cymīn.), a, um. (cuminum) Seasoned with cummin; Pallad. CUMINUM, i. n. (κύνινον) Cumin (Carum Carvi, L.); Hor. CUMMAXIME, or QUUMMAXIME. See QUUM. CUMPRIME, adv. Especially; Gell. CUMPRIMIS, Especially; see CUM. CUMQUE. See CUNQUE. CUMULATE, adv. Abundantly, copiously; officium reddere, Cic.: cumulatius, id.: cumulatissime, id. CUMULATIM, i. q. Cumulate; Prudent. Adj. 1. Increased, augmented; gloria cumulator, Liv. 2. Loaded or crowded with, full of any thing; oratio rerum omni genere, Cic.: cochlear, Colum., a spoonful: mensura cumulatore reddere, Cic.: also with a genitive, Plaut.: hence, III. That has attained the highest degree of perfection; virtus, Cic. CUMULO, ðvi, ðtum, ðre. (cumulus) I. To heap up, heap together; arenas, nivem, Curt.: fig.: to heap, i. e. increase, augment; gaudium, Cic.: bellicam laudem eloquentia, id.: æs alienum, Liv. II. To heap with any thing, to fill; cor ira, Cic.: aliquem gaudio, id.: cumulatæ corporibus fosse, Tac., filled: hence, to bring to the highest degree of perfection; Cic. Fin. 5, 14.—See also CUMULATUS, a, um. CUMULUS, i. m. I. A heap; e. g. of slain enemies, Liv.: terræ, id.: hence fig., rerum, Quint.: æris alieni, Pand.: dierum, Cic., i. e. a great number. II. A heap over and above the usual quantity: hence fig., i. e. that which is added to a thing, superfluous, overplus, addition; mercedis, Cic.: beneficium cumulo augere, id.: accesserint in cumulum, id., i. e. as an addition. III. i. q. Peroratio, Quint. 6, 1, 1. CUNABULA, ðrum, n. (cunæ) I. A cradle; Cic.: also, of animals, Virg. II. Fig. *A cradle, i. e. 1. ESUS, US, M. (edo) An eating; esui esse, Gell., to be fit for eating, to be eatable.

ET, CONJ. (from ētī, moreover) I. And; a well-known conjunction, which serves to connect separate ideas; mater tua et soror a me diligitur, Cic. N. B. 1. In Latin it is often repeated, where in English it would be used only once; in which case the first et may be omitted in translation; or et—et may be rendered, both—and, as well—as, or, not only—but also; et mari et terra, Nep. 2. For et—et we frequently find et—que, or que—et; e. g. officia et servata prætermissaque, Cic.: laudesque et grates egit, Liv. 3. We often find nec (neque), —et, or et—nec (neque), where nec is for et non; e. g. nec miror et gaudio, Cic.: et rem agnoscit, neque hominem ignorat, id.: nec (neque)—et is used for non solum non—sed; in the same manner as et—nec (neque) for non solum—sed etiam non; cf. Bremi ad Suet. Oct. 45, and Gœrenz. ad Cic. Legg. 1, 4, 13. We less frequently find nec (neque)—et for non quidem sed; e. g. Suet. Oct. 66. Et sometimes begins a sentence; et finita quidem sunt partes due, Quint. 5. It sometimes expresses indignation or astonishment; et quisquam dubitabit quin, &c.? Cic. 6. Et is not rarely omitted, between single words and whole clauses; homini gratissimo, jucundissimo, Cic. 7. Et is frequently put after its word; as, Thestylis et, for et Thestylis, Virg. 8. Et quidem, And indeed, intensive and explanatory; duo mille jugerum, et quidem immunia, Cic.: we also find a simple et, for et quidem; e. g. magna vis est conscientie, et magna in utramque partem, Cic.: cf. Bencke ad Cic. Cat. 2, 8, 17. 9. Et etiam, And also, and even; auctoritate, et consilio, et etiam gratia, Cic. 10. Et vero, And truly, and in truth; Cic. Or. 39, extr.: Mur. 22; also, et alone has the signification, and indeed, really even; Cic. Tusc. 1, 29, 71: Suet. Tib. 12. Et is also connected with other particles; et certe, Ter., i. e. yes, yes! et ecce, Virg.: et jam, id. 12. Et non is used in Latin for our and not, when any thing which precedes it is to be noticed and corrected; dicam eos miseros, qui nati sunt, et non eos, qui mortui sunt, Cic. II. Also; verum igitur et extremum, Cic.: addam et illud etiam, id., i. e. I will add yet this too; hence, 1. Also, i. e. even; Cic. Delot. 10. 2. Et quidem, But yet; cruciatus est Trebonius; et quidem a Carthaginiensibus Regulus, Cic. 3. Et autem, But yet; et hæc autem in Italianum primus intulit, Plin. 4. Et quoque is used pleonastically, Liv. 41, 24, extr.: Colum. 12, præf. 10, in the passage of Livy, et quoque may perhaps signify also, moreover, also too. In Suet. we find even sed et etiam, and sed et quoque; cf. Bremi ad Suet. Cæs. 76. III. For, since; et natura tenacissimi sunt eos coram, &c., Quint. 1, 1, 5. IV. Although; Quint. 2, 5, 19. V. But; nullæ habes vitia? imo alia, et fortasse minora, Hor.: thus also in Cicero et is frequently used after a negative proposition for sed, cf. Bencke ad C. C. Cat. 2, 6, 14, and Bremi ad Nep. Paus. 3. VI. Et sometimes begins the apodosis of a sentence (for quum); e. g. nondum quartus a victoria mensis, et libertus—æquabat, Tac. VII. After words of comparison it is used for quum; e. g. lux longe alia est solis et lychnorum, Cic.: thus also, after æque; see ÆQUE.

ETIAMS, Æ, M. (commonly plur. Etesiae, arum, m.) (ἔτηςια, sc. ἄνεμοι) Certain annual winds, which in the dog-days used to blow for the space of forty days, without changing, from the same quarter; Cic.

ETHOS, n. (ἦθος) Manners, character, habit; Quint.: morality, moral philosophy; Sidon.: Varr.: also, a drawing of characters; Varr. ap. Non.

ETIAM, conj. (from ē and the adverbial termination am, as in jam, ambifariam, &c.) 1. Also, likewise, besides, expressing increase or addition; voce, motu, forma etiam magna, Cic.; it is frequently found in connection with other particles; 1. Tum—tum etiam, or quum—tum etiam, as—so also; Cic. Arch. 12; ad Div. 7, 14. 2. Non solum, or non modo—sed etiam, or verum etiam, not only—but also; Cic. 3. Etiam si or etiāmsi, although; id. 4. Etiam quoque is said to be used pleonastically, Ter. Hec. 4, 8; Cic. Verr. 3, 88; but in both passages we find quoque etiam, i. e. also moreover, also too. Hence, II. Yet, too, likewise denoting increase or addition; addam et illud etiam, Cic., yet this also: especially before comparatives; yet, still; multo etiam gravius, Cæs.: quingueremes aut etiam majores, Cic.

III. Yet, as yet (adhuc), denoting the continuance of an action or circumstance; non satis me pernosti etiam, Ter.: quum iste etiam cubaret, in cubiculo introductus est, Cic.; cf. Heindorf ad Hor. Sat. 1, 4, 62. Also in connection with other particles; 1. Nondum etiam, vixdum etiam, where it serves to strengthen; Ter. Andr. 1, 2, 31; Cic. Catil. 1, 4, extr. 2. Etiam dum, yet, as yet; Ter. 3. Etiam num and etiam nunc.—See ETIAMNUM and ETIAMNUM. 4. Etiam nunc, as yet, not to that time; Ter.: Cic. IV. Once more, again; circumspice etiam, Plaut.; dic etiam clarius, Cic. Hence, V. Etiam atque etiam, Once and again, i. e. one time after another, several times, over and over, repeatedly; puto etiam atque etiam mihi dicendum esse, Cic.: te etiam atque etiam rogo, id., i. e. most earnestly: etiam atque etiam considerabat, id., i. e. maturely. VI. Even; tabulas nihil profuturas: etiam plus suspitionis futurum, Cic. VII. Yes, yea. 1. In answers; numquid vis? etiam, Plaut. 2. When it is opposed to 'no'; aut etiam aut non responderet, Cic. 3. In concessions, yes, granted, I grant it, true, &c., etiam, inquit, beatam, sed non beatissimam, Cic., i. e. yes, happy, but not, &c.

VIII. In questions it gives greater force to a demand; etiam aperis? Plaut., will you open? etiam taces? Ter. IX. In scolding; etiam rides, Ter., do you laugh. ETIAMNUM, or ETIAM NUM (etiam nunc) Still, i. e. I. Now, till now, even till now, still; Plaut.: respecting the difference between etiamnum and etiamnunc critics are not even now quite agreed; according to Gernhard (ad Cic. Am. 3, 11), etiamnum means, 'still, even then,' etiam nunc, 'even now,' the former referring to past time, the latter to time present; cf. Zumpt's Gr. chap. 63, 285. II. Till 'that time, up to that time, even then; Plin. III. Again, besides, also, in addition; id. IV. With a comparative, Yet, even; Cels.

ETIAMNUM, or ETIAM NUM. I. Still, till this time, till now, even now; Cic.: also of past time, still, till that time, till then; id.; Nep.: etiamnunc denotes the present time in which I live, or in which I place myself: hence it is often apparently put for past time, and to be rendered then, at that time; but in these instances we must always conceive of the events as present to us. II. Still, i. e. also; Cic.

ETIAMSĪ, or ETIAM SĪ. Even if, although; Cic.: it is stronger than etsi, id.

ETIAMTUM, or ETIAM TUM (etiam tunc) i. e. Still, i. e. even to that time, even then; Cic.

ETSI, conj. (from et and si) I. Although; Cic. II. Without a reddition, although, yet, but; do pœnas temeritatis mœæ; etsi quæ fuit ista temeritas? Cic.

ILLAUTUS, a, um. (in and lautus) Unwashed; Plaut.

ILLE, a, ud. (from is, ea, id) I. That; Cic.: ex illo, sc. tempore, since that time, from that time, Virg.: Ov.: ex illo quo, &c., Ov., from the time that: postilla, or, post illa, Ter., afterwards; illa, sc. parte, there; see ILLA. It is frequently redundant with quidem; e. g. non mali illi quidem, sed non — acuti, Cic.: amor tuus, non ille quidem mihi ignotus, id.; also in other connections; quem neque fides neque illum misericordia repressit, Ter.: quicquid illud tribuisset, Tac.: velut ille — lupus, Virg.

II. That, when referring to a remote word in the sentence; Cic.: especially with hic as a distributive; e. g. ille — hic, that — this, or, the former — the latter; or, hic — ille, this — that, or, the latter — the former; Cic.: but this order is frequently neglected by the ancients. We find also ille, for hic, after alter, when ille means, The other; Liv.: also the plurals hi — illi, these — those, i. e. some — others; Plin.: we also sometimes find ille repeated; e. g. ille vel ille, Ov., this or that, i. e. the one or the other: in illis — in illis, Ter., for in his — in illis; cf. Herzog ad Cæs. B. G. 3, 11. III. That (emphatic), i. e. the ancient, the well-known, the celebrated; ille Cato, Cic.: Medea illa, id.; also with the first or second person; ille ego, Virg.: Ov.: ille reservas? Sen. Hippol. 923. Hence, in forensic language, ille usually refers to the absent parties so far as they are known to the hearers. In epistolary style it denotes a third person at a third place. IV. That, i. e. the great; ille Jupiter, Plaut. V. This, when dependent upon what follows; unum illud dico, this one thing will I say, Cic.: in this case it is also preceded by hic, hæc, hoc, which refers to what goes before; hæc dicta sunt: illa (i. e. what is now to follow, &c.), Colum.: also with an accusative and infinitive, when it is redundant; illud perlibenter audivi, te esse, &c., Cic. Hence ille, like hic, when used of time, namely, with annus, mensis, dies, denotes the portion of time now current, that has already been entered upon and still lasts; illum esse vigesimum annum, Sall., that this was now the twentieth year.

VI. The same; illorum, qui, &c., Cic. N.B. Illece, for ille, Plaut.: Cato: illemet, for ille, Cic.: illa, for illius, Lucr.: illi, for illius, Cato: illi, for illic; see ILLI. Ille is frequently used in Latin with emphasis either alone or with some other pronoun, where to it it appears redundant; as in Hor. Sat. 2, 3, 204: Nep. de Regg. 3, ab eodem illo.

IMŪLUS, a, um. (dimin. of imus) i. q. Imus. At the bottom, the lowest; Catull.

IMUS, a, um. superl. of inferus, a, um, and contr. from infimus. I. What is lowest or at the bottom, the lowest; sedes, Cic.: ab inis unguibus, id., from the extremity of,

&c.: usque ad imos pedes, Suet., to the toes: in fundo imo, Virg., in the very bottom: imis deorum, for diis, Ov.: conviva imus, Hor., that reclines at the bottom: hence, Imum, The lowest part, bottom, foundation; ima maris, Plin.: ima summis mutare, Hor.; or, miscere, Vell., to turn topsy-turvy or upside down, i. e. to confound every thing: imo, at the bottom, Ov. Met. 5, 588: ab imo, from the bottom, Auct. ad Her.: respirare ab imo, Ov., to fetch a deep sigh: we find also imus, a, um, for imum, or ima pars; e. g. ab imo pectore, for ab imo (or ima parte) pectoris, Virg.: in ima aure, Plin. II. The last; mensis, Ov.: hence, Imum, The last, the end; ad imum, at last, in the end, Hor.: fundus imus, i. e. finis fundi, Ov.: imus mensis, id., the month of February: faber imus, Hor., the lowest, worst; but some read unus.

IN. præp. separabilis (from the Gr. in). I. With an accusative, to denote a direction or motion towards a place. 1. In, to, towards, to the question, whether? mittere in Asiam, Nep.: aliquem in humeros suos efferre, Cic.: in populum perducere aliquem, Sisen., but, ¹ The ablative is sometimes used to the question, whether? introrumpam in adibus, Plaut.: infundere in naribus, Colum. ² With the names of towns the rule is that the preposition be omitted; as, eo Romam: but we sometimes find in; e. g. mulierem in Ephesum advehit, Plaut.: advenis in Epidaurum, id. 2. In, with a measure; sex pedes in altitudinem, Cæs., in height: pedes CC in longitudine, id., in length. 3. Towards, wards, or wise in English, at the end of a word; in cœlum conspicis, Plaut. 4. Towards, to; amor in patriam, Cic.: merita in remp., id.: crimen in hunc, id.: dicere in aliquem, id.: in this sense we sometimes find it with the ablative; in hoc odium fuit, Nep.: grati in te bene merito, Cic. 5. To, denoting the object, aim, or design to which an action is directed; vocare ad se in nuptias, Plaut.: in luctum familie, Cic., to the grief of, &c. 6. In, after, according to; iudicium accipere in ea ipsa verba, Cic.: in plumam, Virg., after the manner of feathers: hostilem in modum, Liv.: in barbarum, Tac. 7. For, in numbers or partitions, to the questions, for how long? for how many? in pedites singulos dati octingenti æris, Liv., were given for each foot-soldier: centum assibus in modis, id.: in singulos annos, Cic., for every year: in unum diem, Liv., for one day: in postero diem, Cic.: in dies (or indies), id., daily, every day: in horas, id., hourly. 8. Until; boves pariunt in decem annos, Varr.: differ in annum, Hor. 9. On account of; pecuniam in stipendium pendere, Liv.: in hæc obsides dati, id. 10. In respect of; partem damnatur in unam, Ov. 11. In ante diem; see ANTE. II. With an ablative, to denote presence, rest, state, or action at a place. 1. In, at, to the question, where? esse in Sicilia, Cic.: sedere in solio, id.: dicere in senatu, id.: but, ¹ We find such expressions as, esse in amicitiam, Cic.: habere in potestate, Cæs. This construction is formed after the manner of the Greeks, who frequently use eis thus brachylogically. In oppida abesse, Suet., is a remarkable expression. ² With the names of towns, the preposition is usually omitted; sum Carthagine, Athenis: but it is sometimes expressed; in Epidaurum, Plaut.: in Alexandria, Liv. In, like the Greek en, is used with the names of towns to denote the country immediately about them; in Philippis, i. e. at Philippis, near Philippis. But, on the other hand, with the names of countries the preposition is sometimes omitted, and then the simple ablative denotes the whole extent of the country; tota Africa, Nep., i. e. per totam Africam; cf. Herzog ad Cæs. B. G. 5, 55: thus also, toto celo, Cic. ³ With words of time the preposition is usually omitted, but it is sometimes used; in hoc tempore, Cic.: but in tempore means, at a proper time, Liv. 2. In or at; in vino, Plaut., at drinking of wine: thus also, in legendo, in or at reading. 3. On, at, by, near, with; coronam habebat in collo, Cic., on his neck: in tanta perfidia, Sall., with so great: also with an accusative; e. g. in vulgus probari, Cic., by the public. 4. Among (inter); esse in civibus clarissimis, Cic.: in magnis viris non est habendus, id.: hence, in his, Liv.; or, in eis, Nep.; or, in quibus, Liv.; among these, and, among other things. This in his is used especially, after a general expression in the plural, in order to introduce an example; our, among others, for example. 5. From, out of; bibere in ossibus, Flor. 6. With; potare in rosa, Cic., crowned with roses: occurrit horridus in jaculis, Virg.: Neptunus in hasta, Val. Fl.: in crepidis, Suet., with slippers on, in slippers. 7. For super, Upon, or, over; pontem facere in flumine, Nep. 8. Of, concerning; quod in servo bono dici solet, Cic. N. B. 1. Esse in integro, i. e. esse integrum, Liv.: thus also, in facili esse, to be easy, id. 2. In is sometimes redundant: in hoc tempore, Cic.: on the other hand, it is frequently omitted by poets, and even by prose writers; literis, quibus erat scriptum, id.: but between literis and in literis Cicero observes the following distinction; that the former includes the whole contents of the letter, whilst in literis refers only to part of the letter. Cf. Billerbeck ad Cic. Off. 2, 15, 53. 3. In eo est, ut, &c., it is on the point of, Nep.

IN. præp. inseparabilis (from the Greek συν, without or the privative syllable α). It is usually placed before nouns, to which it gives a signification the contrary of that of the simple word; e. g. infans, inductus, &c. When it is placed before a participle, this becomes an adjective, and is construed as such; e. g. impatiens laborum.

II. A house without a court in front and detached buildings, such as are most of the houses in our cities and towns, whether built alone or connected with others by a partition wall. The insulæ at Rome were situate, for the most part, in rows behind the large mansion (domus) of a common proprietor, and the houses forming them were let either whole, or in apartments, to tenants of more limited means, Cic.; cf. DOMUS. It remains to be observed, that also several houses standing close to each other, in so far as they belonged to one proprietor (insulæ dominus), were called insulæ. That such an insulæ could have been connected with another by a common partition wall, may perhaps be doubted. There was always between each insulæ a small space, which, however, was frequently so narrow that no one could pass along it. Varro L. L. 5, 5; Ter. Adep. 4, 2, 39.

IRRUPTUS, a, um. (in and ruptus) Untorn, unbroken, undivided; Hor.

Is, eā, id. (from the old Gr. pronoun ἰ or ἴς) I. The same person or thing, or, he, she, it; mihi veniat obvium puer tuus: is mihi literas reddidit, Cic.: is est, an non est? Ter., is it he or not? also of the first and second person; credidi homini docto mandare: is lapidi mando, Plaut., i. e. and I, &c.: qui magister equitum viderere, is per municipia cucurrisset, Cic. N. B. I. It frequently agrees with its predicate; ea causa belli fuit, that was the, Liv., for id.: is denique honos mihi videri solet, Cic. 2. It is used with a substantive in the same number, gender, and case, although it refers to another word; quæ vectigalia locassent, ea rata locato, for eorum, Liv.: ea libera conjectura est, for de ea, id. It also frequently agrees with a substantive connected with and put immediately after qui, quæ, quod; e. g. ea, quæ gemma dicitur, Cic., that, which is called. 3. It is also redundant before qui, quæ, quod; particularly, we often find id quod, for quod; e. g. si nos, id quod debet, nostra patria delectat, Cic.: this id, however, is by no means altogether redundant; but, connected with quod, it denotes a parenthesis; id quod debet, and that ought to be the case. Id quod means also, wherefore, or, since; Ter. is is redundant in other instances; also; quod ne id facere posses, Cic.: quorum eorum unus, Plaut.: thus also, quid est quo non eodem progrediat, Cic.: especially when it comes after any thing, late in the sentence; urbem novam, conditam vi et armis, iure eam condere parat, Liv.: nescire, quid acciderit, id est semper esse puerum, Cic. On the contrary, it is omitted; nunc redeo ad quæ mihi mandas, for ad ea, quæ, &c., id. 4. Id is frequently used as a substantive, and so with a genitive: ad id locorum, Liv.; or, ad id, id. i. e. up to that time, as yet, to the present time: ad id diei, Gell., at that time of day; especially when it may be rendered, 'such'; id temporis, Cic., at that time, at such a time: homo id ætatis, id., of that (such an) age; et id ætatis jam sumus, id., We also find id, for propter id, Therefore, on that account; id prode, Ter.: id gaudeo, Cic.: also for in eo, therein, in that; Plaut.: also for ad id, or ejus rei; e. g. idne estis auctores mihi? Ter., i. e. do you advise me to that? it is also redundant; id adjuta me, quo, &c., id.: especially before an accusative and infinitive; Cæsari quum id nunciatum esset, eos per provinciam iter facere, Cæs.: again, in id, for that purpose; Liv.: ex eo, from that, hence; Cic.: id est, that is, that is to say, in explanations; hodie, id est, Cal. Oct. Cic.: idque, for id quoque, Tac. Suetonius uses this id est frequently, when he would define more closely any thing previously said in a more general manner, and then it may sometimes be rendered, Namely. 5. Et, atque, id, or idque, And that, and indeed, and besides, and what is more, in explanations; thus also, et is (ea), isque, &c.; and, nec is (ea id), and that not, and indeed not, nor that indeed; in quæ legione, eaque vacillante, Cic.: literæ, nec eæ vulgares, id.: expectabam tuas literas, idque cum multis, id.: causas, et eas tenues, id. 6. It is redundant before quidem, when followed by sed; e. g. humanus is quidem, sed, &c., Cic.: thus also, ille quidem. 7. Et (abl. neut.), with comparatives; for this in English we use, The; eo gravior est dolor, quo culpa major, Cic.: thus also, eo magis, the more, id.: again, wherefore, on which account; Cic.: Liv.: also adverbially, thither, or, so far, prop. and fig.; eo se recipere, Cæs.: eo reverti, Cic.: eo accessit, ut, &c., id.: eo consuetudinis res adducta est, Liv., so far into vogue: eo usque, so long; seq. dum; Cic.: or, seq. donec; Liv.: also, so far; seq. dum; Colum.: also, eo (sc. loco), for ibi, Cic.: again, in eo, on the point; quum jam in eo esset, ut, &c., Nep.: non est in eo, Cic., it is not so in eo est means also, it consists in, depends upon; Cic.: cum eo, with that limitation or condition; Liv. 8. Sometimes it is used for the reciprocal pronoun; se meruisse, ut ei, &c., for, sibi, Cic.: quum viderent, de eorum virtute non dubitari, for sua, Nep. 9. Eum postulare, ut sibi datur, for, postulare, ut is sibi, &c., Liv. 10. It sometimes refers to a substantive which has not been expressed, but is contained in the preceding verb; quid sentiam,—ne ad eam (sc. sententiam) meditare, Cic., where sententiam must be supplied from quid sentiam. 11. Ea, sc. via, or parte, There; Nep.: Liv.: also, for ideo, Cic. 11. The same, that, the man (woman, &c.), the one, that one, &c., as a correlative of qui, quæ, quod; e. g. is, qui phœnicus appellatur, Cic.: also, with verbs of the first and second person; is feci, qui sodalis eram, Lentul. in Cic. Ep. III. Such; neque is es, qui, quid sis, nescias, Cic.: is in illum sum, qui, &c., id.: ea ætate, Ter. It may also, suitably to the context, be rendered, Of that kind, of such a kind, of such a nature, so disposed, &c.; qui potest temperantiam laudare is (so disposed), qui, &c., Cic. This is always followed by qui or ut, with a conjunctive. N.B. 1. licet, for is, Plaut.; ei, for ei (dat.), Plaut.; Lucr.: thus also, ea, for ei, Cato. 2. ibus and ibus, for is, Plaut.; also, ebus, for is, Cato.

ISTE, a, ud. (from is and the affix te) I. The same; Cic. II. This; Cic.: also, that; id. III. Such; quum sis ista auctoritate, Cic. IV. In letters it refers to the place where the person addressed is residing, when it may sometimes be rendered, There; perfer istam militiam, Cic., there, i. e. in Gaul; ista inaniora, Cic., affairs there. In forensic speaking, iste refers to the party opposed to the speaker, or denotes the opposing plaintiff or defendant. Thus, in the speeches of Cicero against Verres, the orator frequently uses iste of Verres simply as the accused person, without intending to imply any contempt. V. It is also used by way of contempt, as in English, That fellow, &c.; istius decreta, Cic.: it is sometimes used with another pronoun, in which case it cannot always be very well translated; iste tuus vates, Ov.: quis iste arcuit? Stat., who is he that, &c. N.B. Iste, a, ud, like is, &c., agrees with its subject; non erit ista amicitia, scd mercatura, Cic., that will not be friendship, &c., for, istud non erit, &c. N.B. 1. Istius, neut., for istius rei; e. g. nihil istius, Ter. 2. Ce is sometimes appended; istiusce, Plaut. 3. Gen. isti, for istius; Cato; hence, istimodi, Plaut. 4. Dat. ista, for isti, Plaut. 5. Iste, ablat., i. e. ista rei, Therefore; Plaut.: also, thither; see ISTO.

Ter.: homo istic atatis, id., of that (such an) age: istic considerabo, Cic.: posse istac sic abire, id.: hence, I. Istoc, for istoc iste, Ter. 2. Istac, There, thither; Ter.: istac tenus; see ISTACTĒNUS. N.B. The syllable ce, and in a question cine, is annexed to it; istacce ridicularia, Plaut.: istucine interminata sum? Ter.: we find also istac (plur. fem.), for istacce, Plaut.: Ter., where the e is omitted.

ISTIC, or ISTHC, adv. I. There, in that place; Cic.: Liv.: it is particularly used to express the place or country at which a person resides to whom one writes a letter; Cic. II. There or here; istic mane, wait here, Ter.: also fig., There, or, here, i. e. in this affair; quid istic? (faciendum), id., what is to be done in this business? istic sum, I pay attention to what you say, Ter.: Cic. N.B. In questions, cine is appended; as, isticine habitabis? Plaut.

ISTIC, adv. To that place; Cic.

ISTIMŌDI, for istiusmodi; Plaut.

ISTINC, or ISTHC, adv. (from iste and hinc) I. Thence, from that place; Ter.: especially of a place where a person to whom one speaks or writes is resident; Cic. II. Thereof, i. e. of that thing; dimidium istinc dare, Plaut., the half of it.

ISTĪUSMŌDI, or ISTĪUS MODI. Of that kind, such, and so i. q. talis; e. g. ratio istiusmodi, Cic.
