LEGĪŌ, ōnis, f. (lego, ere) I. A legion, i. e. a certain number or corps of foot-soldiers. 1. Of Romans; Cæs.: Liv.: it consisted of ten cohorts, each reckoned at 420 men, and so contained 4200 men, to which were added 300 Roman horsemen. But this was not always the number; it was sometimes greater, sometimes less: and each legion was augmented by more than an equal number of auxiliaries (socii), both infantry and cavalry; hence, when we read of a legion, we may understand a body of from nine to ten thousand men. N.B. 1. The legionary soldiers were, by law, all Roman citizens: but in times of extreme necessity slaves were sometimes enrolled amongst them; Liv. 2. The chief standard was an eagle; see AQUILA. 3. A consul commanded an army of two legions, a praetor of one; but in later times the command of each was increased. 2. Of other nations; e.g. of allies, of Samnites, Gauls, Carthaginians; Liv. II. Also gen. An army; Plaut.: Virg. III. Fig.; legiones parat, Plaut., i. e. aids.

MAGIS, adv. (from the old magus, i. e. magnus) I. More; magis erit parricida, Cic. N.B. 1. It is used with the ablative eo or tanto, by so much the more, quo or quanto, by as much the more, multo, much more; eo magis, or hoc magis, Cic.: tanto magis, id.: multo magis, id.: nihilo magis, not at all the more, id.: thus also, neque eo magis, i. e. et ameri non, Nep.: quo magis, the more, by how much the more; Ter.: Nep. 2. With quam, than, Cic.: also with atque, for quam, Ter.; or, ac, Cic.: but it is frequently used, with the omission of quam, with an ablative, which is explained by than (quam) magis solito, more than, &c. Liv.: magis Alibiem die Alliam reformidaturos, i. e. quam Alliensium diem, Liv. 3. Before numerals it is used without quam, and without being followed by an ablative; annos natus magis quadraginta, Cic., above forty years old, more than forty years old. 4. It is used with adjectives which have no comparative in it; magis necessaria ratione, Cic.: also with such as have a comparative in it; magis impensè, Ter.: thus also with adverbs; magis impensè, Ter. 5. It is also found redundantly, with comparatives; magis dulcius, Plaut.: magis locupletior, Val. Max.: magis cautius, Ter.: magis clarior, Justin. Cf. Ruhnk. ad Ter. Hee. 5, 4, 1, 11. In this manner the Greeks likewise use their μάλλον; thus also, magis malle, Liv. 6. On the other hand, it is sometimes omitted where it ought to be used; tacita bona est mulier scemper quam locuens, Plaut., for magis tacita: ipsorum, quam Hannibal, interesse, Liv.: and thus very frequently in Tacitus:

legiones, prædæ quam periculum sociæ, Hist. 3, 60. 7. Magis et magis, or, magis magisque, Cic.; or, magisque magis, Catull.; or, magis atque magis, Virg., i. e. more and more. 8. Tam magis, and quam magis, for eo magis, quo magis, Virg.; and thus frequently, quam magis, for quo magis, Plaut.: Lucr. 9. Magis quam, for quo magis, Plaut. 10. Magis est quod, or, ut, i. e. there is greater reason, there is more cause; magis est, quod gratuler, Cic.: magis est, ut ipse moleste ferat, id.: also seq. ne; Pand.: also seq. accus. et infin.; id. 11. Non magis, Not more; Cic.: also, none the more, just as little; Nep.: Cic.: thus also, haud magis, Liv.: and, neque eo magis, Nep.: also, not only; Liv.: Nep., when it is followed by quam, i. e. but also. II. More, i. e. rather; potius, Cic.: Virg. The superlative of magis is MAXIME (MAXUME). I. In the highest degree, especially, very, exceeding; fidelis, Cic.: florere, Nep.: hence, ut quisque maxime—ita maxime (or potissimum), Cic., for quo magis—eo magis: for this we find also, quam maxime—tam maxime, Ter.: hence, tam sum amicus reip., quam qui maxime, Cic., i. e. as any one can possibly be: grata ea res, ut quæ maxime senatui unquam fuit, for, grata ea res maxime senatui fuit, Liv.: domus celebratur ita, ut quam maxime, Cic., sc. celebraretur, i. e. especially, chiefly; see QUUM. N. B. 1. It is used with adjectives that have no superlative in mus, the place of which it supplies; maxime naturalis, Cic.: also sometimes with adjectives that have a superlative; maxime utilis, Ter. 2. It is used with a superlative for the sake of emphasis or amplification; maxime liberalissima, Cic. 3. It is preceded by quam, or vel, or multo, which increases the intensity of its signification; quam maxime, very much, as much as possible, Cic.: also with possum; e. g. verbis, quam maxime possem, lectis, Cic.: thus also, vel maxime, id.: multo maxime, Sall.: also preceded by quam, for quam; e. g. nunc quam maxime, Cic., now especially, or, just now: for this we find also, ut quam maxime, Ter.; see QUUM. II. Especially, particularly, principally; poetæ, et maxime Homerum, Cic. III. In answers, Yes, very well (as in Greek μάλιστα); Ter.: also in concessions, yes; cognata est maxime, Ter. IV. At the most, at best; Gell. V. Exactly, just; quum hæc maxime cognosceremus, Cic.: hence, quum (for quam) maxime, Ter.; Cic., i. e. just now; for which we find also, nunc quam maxime, Cic.: and, ut quam maxime, Ter.: see QUUM.

MĒMINI, isse. (perf. of the obsolete verb, meminno, Gr. μῆμναι, μῆμναι, I represent to my mind, i. e. imagine to myself; hence, in the perfect.) I. That has retained in the memory, to recollect, remember. 1. Seq. genit.; Cic. 2. Seq. accus., both of the thing and person; Cic. 3. Seq. de; Cic. 4. With other words; meministi, quanta esset, &c., Cic.: seq. ut; Ter.: seq. quum; e. g. meministi, quum videbare, Cic., that you. 5. With an accus. and infin.; both of the present; meministi, to narrate, Cic.; and of the perfect; meministi, me distribuisti, id. Here observe: the present (not imperfect) infinitive is used in representing to our mind a past action, the circumstances of which are clearly impressed on the memory; and hence it is especially adapted to lively narrative: the infinitive preterite is used of circumstances or events which are not to be described as quite finished in past time, and accordingly, such as quickly transpired, such as we know by hearsay, and the like. N.B. Meminisse, for memoria, Lucr. 4, 769.—Synon. Meminisse (prop., i. q. Memoreme esse) signifies, to remember what has not escaped one's memory; reminisci, to recollect any thing that has already escaped the memory, to recall to mind; recordari, to bring any thing again before the mind, and spend some time in the contemplation of it, to represent to one's self. Cf. Herzog, ad Sall. Cat. c. 51, p. 285, &c. II. To remember, think of any thing, bear in mind, be mindful, consider, reflect; seq. ut; Colum.: seq. infin.; Hor.: seq. accus.; e. g. beneficium, Cic., to be mindful of them: also absolute; fac meministeris, Ter.: also seq. accus. et infin.; e. g. memementote, hos esse pertimescendos, Cic.: hence, meministeris mihi, Cic. ad Div. 15, 17, remember me, i. e. write to me: nec meministeris vie, Virg., not to know well: leti paterni, Val. Fl., not to forget to avenge: nec meministi, Propert., she does not think of it, it does not occur to her. III. To know, know well; Ter. IV. To mention, make mention of; de exsultibus, Cic.: hujus rei, Quint. V. Fig. of things without life; meministi levem præstare salutem, Lucr., i. e. can. N.B. Meminens, Mindful; Liv. Andr.

Hor., of a very rich person: hence, pleno modio, Cic., with full measure, i. e. abundantly. N.B. Gen. Modium, for modiorum, Cic. II. i. q. Tertia pars iugeri; Pallad.

Modo, adv. I. Only, but; vide modo, see only, Cic.: sine modo, only allow, Ter.: qui modo scire curaverit, Cic., only, i. e. namely: si modo, id., only if, i. e. provided that, id.: dum modo, or dummodo, id., only; see Dummodo: also without dum; e. g. modo ne turpitudin sequatur, id.: modo ut, &c., only that, &c.: modo ut vita suppetat, id.—Synon. Modo, only, expresses a subjective judgment or decision, limitation, or definition: tantum, so much, only so much (and no more), extensive and intensive; and hence it is used with numbers; solum, alone, only (not in common with others), exclusively, in this single case: non nisi, only in this supposed case (containing an hypothetical judgment or decision): duntaxat, to speak properly, strictly speaking (never used in comparative propositions, but in adverbial clauses with sed it might be used): tantummodo and solummodo (the latter only in later writers) are used in such a manner that the principal words solum and tantum are in some degree limited by modo, but only, only so far as: cf. Herzog. ad Sall. Cat. 39, 6: hence, modo non, almost, nearly, Ter.: modo signifies especially, Only, i. e. alone, simply, merely, and, so, non modo, not only, not simply, not merely: sometimes followed by sed (verum) etiam (quoque), and sometimes not; in the latter case it may be variously rendered, not even, not to say, to pass over, &c.: nullum dictum, non modo factum interessit, Cic., i. e. to say nothing of an action: non modo plura sed pauciora, id.: num me fessellit, non modo res, verum dies? id.: non modo timet, verum etiam fert, id.: also, when ne—quidem precedes, non modo may be rendered, not to say, &c.; ne sues quidem id vellit, non modo ipse, Cic. Tusc. I, 38, not even sows wish this, to say nothing of himself. N.B. From non (nullus, nemo, &c.) modo non, the Romans frequently omitted the latter non, when followed by sed vix, and especially by ne quidem; ut non modo ad expeditiones, sed vix ad quietas stationes viribus sufficienter, Liv.: non modo facere, sed ne cogitare quidem audebit, Cic., not only not to do: non modo quiescere, sed ne spirare quidem, id.: but the ancients also frequently said, non modo non, sed ne quidem; e. g. non modo non patricium, sed ne civem quidem, Liv.: non modo non mortuus, sed ne natus quidem, Cic.: modo signifies, only, i. e. simply, merely, also in other instances; delectationem modo habere, id.: see Benecke on the use of non modo non and non modo, ad Cic. Cat. I, 3, p. 39.

II. Of time. I. Only, i. e. lately, a short time since; Cic. N.B. Also of a space of several days, weeks, and years; modo hoc malum in remp. invasit, Cic. Off. 2, 21, i. e. not long since, by which, however, as Gronovius supposes, must be understood about sixty years: modo Lutatio, &c., Liv. 22, 14, a short time since, i. e. twenty-five years ago. 2. Now, just now, but this moment; advensi modo? Ter., i. e. now, but this moment. Modo—modo, Now—now, at one moment—at another; modo ait, modo negat, Ter., at one time he says yes, at another, no: modo hoc, modo illo modo, Cic.: et modo, and then again, another time (in narration), Propert.: et modo—et modo, sometimes—sometimes; Propert. I, 15 (14), 3, sq.: sometimes it is repeated more than once; modo subacti, modo domiti, modo multati, Cic.: also, for one modo another word is sometimes used; modo—interdum, Sall.: sepe—modo, id.: modo—tum autem, Cic.: modo—modo—tum, id.: modo—nunc, Ov.: modo—aliquando, Tac.: modo—nonnumquam, Suet. N.B. The last syllable is long, Cic. N. D. 2, 42, ex Arat.—Synon. Non modo, not only, proceeds from less to greater; non tantum, from greater to less; non solum, leaves it undetermined which is the greater. Cf. Herzog. ad Cæs. B. G. 6, 8.

MURĀHA, or MURRA, æ, f. I. A stone or kind of earth dug in the East, from which they made vessels which were expensive, but fragile; vasa murrhina, Mart.

10, 80, 1. The poets commonly use murrha, for vasa murrhina. Modern investigation seems to have placed it beyond all doubt, that by the murrha of the ancients we must understand no other than porcelain. N.B. For this we find also myrrha. II. For myrrha, Myrrh; see MYRRHA.

MURRHATUS, a, um. See MYRRHATUS.

MURRHEUS, a, um. I. q. Murrhinus; Propert.

MURRHINUS, a, um. I. Of the stone or earth murrha; e. g. murrhina, sc. vasa, Plin.; see MURRHA.

N.B. 1. Vitrum murrhinum, Plin., i. e. glass, which, in respect of the painting, is similar to vasa murrhina. 2. It is also written myrrhinus. II. For myrrhinus, Of myrrh; see MYRRHINUS.

MURRHOBATHRARIUS (Murrob., or Murob.), i. m. (μύρον or μύρρα and βάθειον) One that gives an agreeable smell to women's shoes by means of balsam; Plaut.

MURTA, æ. f. I. q. Myrtus. The myrtle; Cato.

MURTATUS, MURTEUS. See MYRT.

MURUS, i. m. I. A wall; e. g. round a town, Cic. muri, poetice for urbs, Ov.; also of a building; Cic. Tac. II. A wall, fig., i. e. any thing having a resemblance to a wall. 1. A bank or mound of earth, a dam; Varr. 2. The rim of a pot; Juv.; thus also, cor munition costarum et pectoris muro, Plin. 3. A wooden tower carried by elephants; Sil. 4. The head dress of Cybele, consisting of towers, &c., is called murus crinalis; Claud.

III. A wall, fig., i. e. defence, protection; lex Ælia et Fufia propugnacula murique tranquillitatis, Cic.: hic murus æneus esto, &c., Hor.: also of persons; thus Achilles is called murus Graium, Ov.—Synon. Murus and mania; see MÆNIA.

MUS, muris, c. (μῦς) I. A mouse; Cic.: Virg.: Hor.: by mures in ancient writers we must understand not only our common and destructive mouse, but also other animals both native and foreign; e. g. mures Ægyptii, Plin., a species of rat (Mus Cahirinus, or Rat de Caïre of Geoffroy): mus Ponticus, id., said to be an ermine: also, martens, ermines, &c. seem to have been included under this name; indumentis ex pellibus silvestrium murium, Ammian.: also, of those which emit a perfume, perhaps, a civet-cat, Hieron.; see ARANEUS: mus is also used as a term of reproach; Petron. II. Mus marinus, a kind of crustacean or marine animal; Plin.

MUSA, æ. f. (μῦσα) I. A muse, i. e. goddess of learning, especially of poetry and music: the ancients reckoned sometimes three Muses; but usually nine; namely, Calliope, Clio, Melpomene, Thalia, Euterpe, Erato, Urania, Polyhymnia, Terpsichore: hence, crassiore musa, Quint., in a clearer, more perspicuous manner, without too much refinement; sine Musa, Varr., i. e. without genius, wit, taste, or learning. II. A song or poem; prociac, Hor.: pedestris, id., a low style of poetry, bordering upon prose; or it may mean, prose.

III. Musa. Learning, study; agrestiores, Cic.: mansuetiores, id., i. e. philosophy.

MUSEUM, i. n. more correctly MUSEUM.

MUSCA, æ. f. (from μύσκα, dimin. of μῦς) A fly; Varr.: Cic.: hence, of inquisitive persons, who pry into every thing, Plaut.: also of persons that molest and trouble like flies; Catull.

MUSCARIUM, i. n. See MUSCARIUS.

MUSCARIUS, a, um. (musca) I. Of, belonging to, or concerned with flies; araneus, Plin., as it were, fly-hunter: hence, Muscarium. 1. A fly-spat; Mart. 14, 71, where one of the earliest MSS. has muscar. They used for this purpose either peacocks' tails (Mart. 14, 67), or the hairy part of the tails of cows or horses (Mart. 1. c. 71): hence, Muscarium, for, A horse's tail; Veget. 2. The top or tuft of some plants, in which the seed lies; Plin.

II. Clavus, Vitr., i. e. with a broad head.

MUSCERDA, æ. f. Mouse-dung; Plin.

II. Of or belonging to poetry, poetical; studium, Ter., poetry: thus also, ars, id. III. Of or belonging to learning, learned, literary; musicus ludus, Gell.

MUSIGENA, æ. m. (Musa and gigno) A son of a Muse; Rufin.

MUSINO, or MUSMO, ðnis. m. (μῦσμον) A mongrel, i. e. an animal produced by two animals of different species; Cato: Plin.: according to Passow in his Gr. Lexicon, v. Μουσῖον, it is a Sardinian animal, prob. The muf-lone, from which we have the tame sheep. Cf. Schneider ad Varr. de R. R. 2, 12, p. 411. It does not at all follow from the passages in ancient writers, that it was a mule, &c.; and the words in Pliny, 8, 49, 75, declare for the above interpretation.

MUSINOR, ari. To dally, to do a thing for the sake of trifling away time; dum ista musinamur, Varr. ap. Plin.

MUSIUM. See MUSEUM.

MUSIVARIUS, i. m. (musivum) An artist who constructs mosaic work; Cod. Just.

NÁTU, See NATUS, us.

NATÛRA, æ. f. (nascor) I. Birth; natura filius, Cic.: and pater, Ter., by birth. II. The nature, i. e. natural constitution of a thing, natural property; montis, Cæs.: rerum et locorum, Cic.: æris, Lucr.: animi, id., the nature of the soul, i. e. the soul: thus also, alvi, Cic., for alvus: sua natura laudabile, id., i. e. in its own nature: insula natura triquetra, Cæs., i. e. shape, form: also of the human body; tametsi bona natura est, Ter., i. e. shape, figure: exigua naturæ homo, Macrobr., i. e. stature: hence also, a good, proper, due nature (Gr. εὐφύια); natura deest margaritis, Tac.: hence, 1. Inclination, bent, disposition, temper, character; versare suam naturam, Cic.: non potest ea natura (Verris) hoc uno scelere contenta, Cic., such a (wicked) disposition, so a wicked person: homo difficillima natura, Nep., of a morose or peevish temper: præter naturam, Ter., contrary to my disposition: loqui, ut natura fert, Ter., i. e. frankly, naturally: naturam expellas furca tamen usque recurret, Hor., proverbially, i. e. it is hard to alter nature or the natural disposition: we also find, natura rerum, for natura, disposition, natural inclination, Cic. ad Div. 6, 11. 2. Nature, i. e. natural feeling, instinct, propensity; natura victus, Cic.: for this we find also, natura rerum, Val. Max. 8, 1. 3. Nature, i. e. custom, habit, which becomes a second nature; mihi ex consuetudine in naturam vertit, Sall., became natural to me: facere sibi naturam rei, Quint., to render a thing natural to one.

III. The course of nature, the law of nature; the established order of things; the reason of things; natura satisfacere, Cic., i. e. to die: natura insitum est, id.: secundum naturam, id., conformably to nature: jus in natura positum esse, id.: hoc exigit ipsa natura ratio, id.: ea natura rerum, id.: natura rerum non patitur, id., the nature of things: natura civitatum, Nep., the course of things, run of events, in states: hence, 1. The universe; Cic.: for this we find also, rerum natura, id., the world. 2. Possibility; in rerum natura fuisse, Cic., were possible: in rerum naturam cedit, Quint.; or, est in rerum natura, ut, &c., Cels., i. e. it is possible. IV. A thing, being, substance; ex duabus naturis confata, of two things, Cic.: for this we find also, natura rerum; e. g. naturas rerum esse, non figuras, &c., Cic., i. e. real things: hence, natura, as a modest expression, the sexual parts; id.: also of animals; Varr. V. Efficacy, activity; rei, Cic.: deorum, Cic. Leg. 1, 7, agency. VI. Regularity; mundum natura administrari, Cic.

NATURABILIS, e. for naturalis; Apul. NATÜRÄLIS, e. (natura) I. Natural, i. e. by birth; pater, Cic.: filius, Suet., as opposed to an adopted son: but, naturalis pater, or filius, is opposed to own, Pand. II. Natural, i. e. formed by or proceeding from nature, produced or implanted by nature, conformable to nature, innate, inborn; e. g. moles, natural, formed by nature, Cæs.: motus, Cic.: notio, id.: bonitas, Nep.: saxum, Colum.: dies, Censorin., from sunrise to sunset: mors, Plin., i. e. not by violence: hence, naturalia loca, Colum.: or simply, naturalia, Cels., the sexual parts: also sing., naturale, sc. membrum, Cels. III. Of or pertaining to nature; quaestiones, Cic.: pars sapientiae naturalis, Quint., natural philosophy. IV. Natural, i. e. real, actual, found in the world; Lact. V. Natural, i. e. consistent with the order of nature, usual, customary; Plin.

NATURÄLITAS, ätis, f. (naturalis) Naturalness; Tert. NATÜRÄLITER, adv. Naturally, by nature, or, conformably to nature; Cic.

NAVIGIUM, i. n. (navigo) I. A sailing, navigation; ratio navigii jacet, Lucr., i. e. the art of navigation.

II. Any vessel made to sail on the water, a ship, bark, boat, &c.; Cic.: also, a float, raft; Pand.

NAVĪGO, āvi, ātum, āre. (for navigo) I. Intrans.

1. To sail. 1^o Of persons; ex Asia in Macedoniam, Cic.: in portu navigo, Ter., proverbially, I am in safety, have nothing to fear: also, To sail away, set sail, put to sea; Cic. 2^o Of ships and other vessels, To sail, to float; classis navigavit, Cic. 3^o Of goods or freight; ipsæ merces navigant, Pand., i. e. go, are transported.

4^o Of war and victory; belli impetus navigavit, Cic., has set sail. 2. To swim; Ov. Her. 19, 47. 3. To flow, of the sea; in ipso ore navigat mare, Manil.

II. Trans.

1. To navigate or steer a vessel; navis navigandæ causa in maris esse, Pand. 2. To sail through or over; terram, Cic.: æquor, Virg.: hence passive, navigator Occidens, Plin. 3. To gain by navigation; quæ homines arant, navigant, &c., Sall.

NAVĪS, i. f. (navis) I. Any vessel for sailing on the water, a ship, skiff, boat, &c.; e Pompeianum navi advectus sum in Luculli hospitium, Cic., where perhaps it means, a barge; but commonly, a ship of large size; longa, Nep.; Liv., i. e. a man-of-war: oneraria, id., a transport vessel, ship of burden: prætoria, the admiral's ship, Liv.: tecta, id.; or, constrata, Cic., decked, having a deck: aperta, open, without a deck, id.: navis auri, paleæ, id., a gold-ship, chaff-ship, i. e. freighted with gold or chaff: navem construere, or ædificare, id.; or, facere, Cæs., to build: adornare, id.; or, ornare, Liv.; or instruere armareque, id.; or simply, armare, Cæs., to equip, fit out: reficere, Cic., to repair: deducere litore, Virg.; or, in aquam, Liv.; or simply, deducere, Cæs., to launch: subducere, id., to draw ashore: agere, to steer, govern, Hor.: solvere, Cæs., to set sail: we find also, navis solvit, sets sail, id.: conscendere navem, Nep.; or, in navem, Cic.; or, ascendere in navem, Nep.; or, navein, Ter., to embark, go on board: milites in naves imponere, to ship, embark, Liv.: navibus rem gerere, to fight by sea, Hor.: egredi e (ex) navi, Ter.; Cæs.; or, navi, Nep., to debark, disembark, land: navem appellere ad locum, Cic.; or, applicare ad terram, Cæs.; or, terram, Liv., to bring to land: frangere, Ter., to suffer shipwreck: gubernare, to steer, Cic.: tenere in ancoris, Nep., to lie at anchor: in navi vehi, Cic.; or, nave ferri, Hor., to sail in: navibus et quadrigis, Hor., proverbially, i. e. with all one's power, with might and main. II. Cicero uses navis figuratively of the state; una navis est bonorum omnium, Cic.: also of common participation of one and the same danger; ubicunque es, in eadem es navi, id., in the same bottom, run the same risk. III. Navis Argolica, the constellation Argo, Cic. in Arat.: also simply, Navis, id.

NAVĪTA, or contr. NAUTA, æ. m. (navis) A mariner.

I. The captain of a vessel; e. g. nauta, Ter.: Cic.: navita, Apul. II. A sailor, seaman; nautæ, sailors, seamen, a crew; it is sometimes used to express a person of rough manners; Cæs.: Cic.: Hor.: navita is found, Catull.: Propert.: Ov. To take nauta, with Heindorf, ad Hor. Sat. 1, 1, 19, in this passage and some parts of the odes, for mercator, seems far fetched.

NAVITAS, ātis. f. (navus) Promptness, activity, zeal; Cic.

NAVĪTER, adv. I. Promptly, actively, zealously; Liv. II. Altogether, quite; impudens, Cic. We find also naviter; see GNAVITER.

NAVŪ, āvi, ātum, āre. (navus) I. To do, perform, or accomplish any thing with diligence or earnestness; opus, Cic.: nemo est tam afflictus, qui non possit aliquid navare et efficere, id., remp., id., to serve the state: bellum alicui, Tac., to carry on war in favour of any one. II. To show, exhibit with diligence; alicui stu-

dium, Cic.: benevolentiam suam in aliquem, id.: operam navare alicui, to serve; thus also, reip., id.: also without a dative; to serve, act vigorously, take pains; fortiter in acie, Liv., to conduct one's self bravely: navare aliam operam, Cic., to exert one's self in some other way: operam navare, means also, to take pains successfully, to succeed in one's endeavours; id.

NAVŪS, a. um. Active, busy, industrious, strenuous, diligent, indefatigable, assiduous; homo, Cic.: also of things; opera, Vell.: timor, Sil., i. e. that renders industrious. It is also written gnavus; see GNAVUS.

NAXA, æ. f. See NASSA.

NAXIUM, i. n. A kind of stone (cos) for polishing marble and cutting precious stones; Plin.

NE, adv. (from νῆ, according to others, from νῆ; see Buttm. Lexil. 1.) Not, is used, like μῆ, only with subjective or dependant negations, i. e. where only the conception of a thing is negated, but its actual existence is left undetermined; by ne therefore the speaker implies that he regards a thing as not having existence, whilst by non, as by ὅ, which negatives objectively, or unconditionally, he positively affirms that a thing does not exist: hence, ne is used, I. With a condition, or the supposition of a thing, the reality of which is left undetermined; ne fuerit, Cic., there may not have been: ne sit sanæ summum malum, id., granted that it is not: ne æquaverint Hannibali Philippum, Liv. II. In all independent clauses, which contain a command, prayer, demand, or the like: in these instances, ne, like the Greek μή, begins the clause: hence, 1. With an imperative; ne crucia te, Ter.: ne sepelito, neve urito, Cic. e Legg. XII Tab. 2. With a conjunctive expressing command; ne fiat isti viginti dies, Ter.: ne conferas culpam in me, id. 3. With wishes; ne unquam eorum quisque invidet commodis, Plaut.: ne id Jupiter sineret, Liv. (as in Homer, μή ποῦτο θεός τελέσειεν): utinam ne, ob that — not! Ter.: hence with asseverations; ne vivam, Cic., may I not live, may I die: ne sim salvus, si, &c., id. III. With other particles; dum ne, provided that not, Cic.: and, for this, dummodo ne; see DUM: modo ne, id., provided that not; ne quidem. 1. Not even; here observe, 1^o The word or words on which the emphasis is laid, are frequently put between these two: ne populus quidem, Cic.: ne in oppidis quidem, id.: also several words, and even words from the following clause, and even a whole clause; sed ne quomodo fieri quidem possint, &c., id.: ne, quum esset factum, quidem, id.: but we find ne quidem together, Cic. Att. 2, 16. 2^o These words are frequently preceded by a negative particle, as, non, nihil, nunquam, &c., without destroying the negation; non enim prætereundum ne id quidem, &c., Cic.: nihil — ne in oppidis quidem, id.: nunquam ne — quidem, &c., id. 3^o Quidem is sometimes omitted; ne admissum tum quemquam, Stat. Also, Liv. 33, 49; and 44, 36; the former reading was ne, for ne quidem. In modern edd. these passages have been altered; how far, considering the many peculiarities of Livy, this may be right, I cannot pretend to say. 2. Not to say, I will not say, not to mention, not only; Cic. Pis. 5. IV. For modo ne, dummodo ne, Only not, but not, provided that not; sint misericordes in furibus: ne illis sanguinem nostrum largiantur, Sall., i. e. only let them not present our blood to them: ne id, quod agitur, simulaverimus, Liv.: permissum, ut auxilia ab sociis, ne supra quinque millium nummorum acciperet, id.: noluit quid statui, nisi columellam, tribus cubitis ne altiorein, Cic., i. e. but not more than three ells high: jussa dari — ne minus dena millia aris, Liv., but not less than ten. Cf. Goerenz, ad Cic. de Legg. 2, 27, 68. V. For nedum, Much less, the less, not to mention, to pass over; Cic. ad Div. 9, 26; also sequ. conjunct; e. g. ne illi corruptis moribus victoria temperaret, Sall. Cat. 11, fin., not to mention that (but here some Codd. read nedum): ne nunc dulcedine capti, ferant desiderium, Liv. 3, 52: ne quem putatis, &c., Cic. Verr. 4, 23. N.B. Ne, for ne; see NÆ.

NE, conj. That not, in order that not, lest, with a subjunctive. I. Denoting a negative intention; which sense it acquired from its having been frequently used as a prohibitory particle in connection with ut, denoting intention; id egi, ne interesse, Cic.: ne corrumpi possint, idicirco, &c., id.: ne nihil trihuamus, id.: ne dicam, id., that I may not say, or not to say; ne multis, briefly; see MULTUS. N.B. It is usually said that ut ne is equivalent to ne: but this is entirely without foundation; for the ne (in ut) is the adverb, and is always placed, frequently apart from ut, immediately before the word which it effects; That — not; præcipiendum est igitur, ut — ne existim, Cic., that they do not believe: ut hoc ne facerem, Ter., that I should not do this at all. II. Ne, like μῆ, is used purely as a particle of prohibition. 1. After verbs expressing fear, care, anxiety, danger, where we use that without a negative, there is always, as the foundation of this form of expression, a wish that the thing might not be so, might not happen: veror ne hoc fiat, διδοικα μὴ ποῦτο γίνεσθαι, I am afraid (wishing however that it may not be so) that it will happen; metuebant ne indicarent, Cic.: thus also after veror, Ter.: Cic.:

sollicitus sum, Cic.: horreo, id.: and after the substantives, pavor, id.: periculum, Nep.: in all these cases, 'that not,' or 'lest,' is expressed by ne non, or (although more rarely), by ut; e. g. vereor, ne exercitum frimum habere non possit, Cic.: veritus, ne—hostium impetum sustinere non posset, Cæs. B. G. 5, 47: Cic. Tusc. 2, 20, 146. In both these passages the old reading was ut non, as equivalent to ne non; but this would scarcely be Latin. In both, the reading has been altered as given above. The old reading is defended by Grotefend, Lat. Gr. 1. § 239, 3 and 5. 2. Like verbs of fearing, verbs of caution and foresight are frequently followed by a ne, which frequently to us appears pleonastic; cave ne studeas, Ter.: cave ne cupias, Propert., beware of wishing, or, do not suffer yourself to desire: ne quid accūsandus sis, vide, Ter., look beforehand, whether, &c.: vide, ne a malis dici verus possit, see, look, examine, try, &c., whether: quum circumspiceret, ne quid præterisset, Varr. R. R.: singuli pulli tentandi, ne quid habeant in gutture, Colum., whether they have any thing in their crops: videamus, ne beata vita effici possit, Cic., we would consider whether, whether not; similarly in Liv. 2, 3, per aliquot dies ea consultatio tenuit, ne non reddita (bona Tarquinii), belli causa; reddita, belli materia essent, i. e. the deliberation, whether the profrty of Tarquin, if they did not restore it to him, &c.: there is no necessity for supplying quite to him, &c.: there is 3. Compared with our modes of expression, ne appears pleonastic after several verbs denoting negation, refusal, or the like; sententiam ne diceret, recusavit, Cic. (where we should say dicere): casus quidam ne facerent, impedit, id., hindered my doing it: Decii corpus ne impetraret, nox quærentes oppressit, Liv. night came upon them (and hindered them from findings), that it could not be found, &c.: unus, ne caperetur urbs, causa fuit, i. e. was the sole cause that hindered the capture of the city.

NE, as an interrogative particle is enclitic, and is used, I. In a simple interrogation, 1. As directly interrogatory, with an indicative; vide turne hoc tibi verum esse? τί δὲ αὐτῷ σοι πῶτο ὄνα ἀλλοθί; does this appear to you true? also with a conjunctive; putaresne unquam accidere posse, ut, &c., Cic., can you suppose? 2. As indirectly interrogatory with a conjunctive, when it means 'Whether?'; videamus, satisne ista sint justa? Cic. II. In a double or complex interrogation, when it takes after it the interrogatory particles, an, annon, nec ne. 1. In a direct question; Romanne vero, an hic manco, an Arpinum fugiam? Cic.: hoc intellexit' an nondum etiam? Ter.: honestumne factu an (i. e. or) turpe? Cic.: also, ne is sometimes used in the second question, for an, e. g. Justitiene prius mirer, belline laborum, Virg.: if the second question contain simply a negation without a verb, this is expressed by annon: e. g. isne est, quem quero, an non? Ter. 2. In an indirect question; nescio, gratulerne tibi, an timeam, Cic.: if the second question contain simply a negation without a verb, this is expressed by annon or nec ne (where observe, that nec ne is used to express the possibility of the negation, annon to express its reality; for which reason annon is also commonly used in direct interrogations); roga, velintne, annon, uxorem? Ter.: nescio tui scias, an non? Plaut.: cogitato, emitteresne, nec ne, eum servom manu? id.: the verb used with the first question is frequently repeated for the sake of emphasis; videndum 'st, utrum eæ velintne, annon velint, id.: quaritur, sintne dii, nec ne sint, Cic.

III. Ne is frequently used for nonne, as in Gr. ζῆλον, and ζῆλον, for ζῆλον, ζῆλον, ζῆλον; estne marito—in ambo justa potestas? Hor. See Heusinger, ad Cic. de Off. 3, 17.

N.B. 1. The poets sometimes join ne to words to which it does not belong; scammum faceretne Priapum, Hor., for Priapumne, i. e. a bench or a Priapus. 2. This ne is also frequently appended to other words. 1. To other interrogatives; e. g. anne, for an; see AN: uterne, Hor.: utrumne, for utrum, Cic. 2. To the pronoun qui, quæ, quod; Plaut. Rud. 1, 5, 14: Hor. Sat. 2, 3, 295: Catull. 64, 130: to quantus, a, um; e. g. quantane, Hor. Sat. 2, 3, 317: to quia, Virg. Æn. 4, 558: to quam, than, Plaut. 3. Ne frequently loses its e; as, Eunuchon', for Eunuchone, Ter.: egon', for egone, Plaut.; also, an s which would come before it is frequently omitted; viden', for videsne: satine, for satinsne, id.

NEBRIS, idis, f. (νεβρίς) The skin of a fawn or deer which was worn by Bacchantals when they revelled through the streets; Stat.

NEBRITES, æ, m. (νεβρίτης, sc. λίθος) A stone unknown to us, sacred to Bacchus; Plin.

NEBŪLA, æ, f. (from νεβύλη) 1. A mist, vapour, fog; e. g. from the earth, from rivers, &c.; Virg.: Plin.: fig.; errors, Juv. II. A vapour, smoke; as, of fire, Ov.: of a candle, lamp, &c., Pers.: veneni, Sil.: fig. of any thing trifling; cyathus nebulae. Plaut.: grande locuturi nebulas (in) Helicone legunto, Pers. III. A cloud; Virg.: Hor.: hence fig., a cloud; as, a cloud of dust, Lucr.: also of wine, Ov., i. e. perhaps, scum or froth. Since a cloud is not dense, hence, IV. Any thing very thin of its kind, e. g. 1. Of wool; vellera (wool) nebulas æquantia tractu, Ov. 2. Of thin garments; Laber. 3. A thin plate; Mart.

NEBŪLO, āre, (nebula) To cloud over; Tert. Apul. 35; al. enubilantur.

NEBŪLO, ōnis, m. (nebula) A term of reproach, Idle rascal, good-for-nothing fellow, wretch, prodigal; Ter.: Cic.

NEBŪLOSITAS, ātis, f. (nebulosus) Mistiness, cloudiness, darkness; Arnob.

NEBŪLŪSUS, a, um, (nebula) I. Full of mist or vapour, cloudy, dark, foggy; celum, Cic.: dies, Cels.: nebulosior, Cato. II. Fig. Dark, obscure, i. e. difficult to understand; nomen, Geil.

NEC, and NEQUE, are one and the same word of hence they are frequently interchanged, and we find, sometimes, nec—neque, sometimes, neque—nec: however in good writers nec is found usually only before consonants; neque, before vowels: both words therefore signify, I. I. q. Et non, And not, or, also not, neither, nor; Cic.: casus nec mita facta, for et immitia, Ov.: hence, nec non, or, neque non, for et, Varr.: Ov.: also with et; e. g. nec non et Tyrii, and also, Virg.: nec non et hodie, Plin.: neque non et dolla, Varr.: we also find neque (nec) and non separated; Nec vero non, &c., Cic.: neque tamen illa non ornant, id.: thus also, when nec (neque) follows; ut nec, si—poterit, non contendamus, nec, &c., id.: neque (nec) nihil, i. e. et non nihil, and something, Ter.: Cic.: necdum, or nequedum, i. e. et nondum, Cic.: hence, nec quidem, i. e. et ne quidem, and (also) not even, Cic. Fin. 2, 26. Since et—et, denotes both—and, as well—as, also, or, not only—but also, so likewise we find, 1. Nec or neque repeated, for et non repeated, As well not—as also not, or, not only not—but also not, or, which is one and the same thing, neither—nor; nec ad vivos, nec ad mortuos, Cic.: neque tum peccavi, neque, &c., id.: in the same manner, 2. Nec (or neque)—et, or et—nec (neque), can be used when only one negation is to be expressed, thus, nec (neque)—et, or ac, expresses, not only not—but; et—nec (neque), not only—but also not; neque et, is also, indeed not—but, Suet. Oct. 66; nec miror et gaudeo, Cic.: neque tu interfuiti, et ego id egi, id., also, neque, —et, non (for neque—neque) Cic. Off. 3, 1; neque sed, i. q. Non tamen—quam, Pers. 1, 41; Juv. 1, 90. Cf. Goerzen, ad Cic. Acad. 1, 10, 38. N.B. It is frequently preceded by a negative, as non, nullus, nihil, &c., which, however, does not destroy the negation; in these cases the first nec (neque) cannot be rendered into English; nihil tam nec incoquinat nec insperatum accidere potuit, Liv.: nec possum reliqua nec cogitare nec scribere, Cic.: nulla neque—neque, &c.; in other instances also two negatives stand together without destroying the negation, when one of the two is redundant; neque nescio, for neque scio, Plaut.: neque tu haud dicas, Ter. II. Nec, and neque, for non, Not. 1. At the beginning of a period; Nec vero, Cic.: Nec enim, id.: Nec tamen, id.: thus also, Neque enim, Neque vero, Neque tamen, id.: thus also, Neque vero quicquam, for Nihil vero, id.: Nec vero unquam, for Nunquam vero, id. 2. Also in other instances we find nec, for non; e. g. nec quoquam abeo, Plaut.: quod nec bene vertat, Virg.: especially in the old style, nec, for non; see Goerzen, ad Cic. de Legg. 3, 4, 10, senatori, qui nec aderit (e Legg. xii, Tab.); hence, necopinatus, unexpected, necdum, not yet; see NECOPINATUS, and NECDUM. III. For, ne quidem, Not even; his certe neque amor causa est, Virg.: thus also, Cic. Agr. 3, 2; Suet. Calig. 15; Mart. 2, 75. IV. But not; Virg. Geor. 2, 95: Cic. Top. 2. Nec (neque) is often found in Nep. and Suet. for nec tamen, nec vero. See Bremi ad Nep. Agesil. 1, Suet. Cæs. 79; also in Tac. Agr. 8, nec is used for nec tamen. We also find nec, for nec enim, Plaut. Capt. 3, 5, 42; Ov. Met. 9, 359.

NECATOR, ōris, m. (neco) He that kills; Lamprid.

NECATRIX, icis, f. (necator) She that kills; Augustin.

NEC-DUM, or NEQUE-DUM. 1. For, et nondum, And not yet; Cic.: Liv. II. For nondum, Not yet; Virg.

NECESSARIE, adv. Necessarily, unavoidably; Val. Max. 7, 6, 3: Cic.: necessaria demonstrans, id., i. e. proving in an unexceptionable manner.

NECESSARIO, adv. Necessarily, by necessity, Greek ἀνάγκη; Cic.: Cæs.

NECESSARIUS, a, um, (necessa) I. Urgent, pressing; tempus, Cic. 2. Forced, occasioned by necessity; rogationes, Cic. II. Requisite, needful, indispensable; ad vitam, Cic.: quod mihi maxime necessarium, id., most at my heart: necessarius questioni, Suet., necessary to the inquiry, i. e. that must be heard. N.B. Compar. in or; e. g. necessarius medela, Tert. III. That is closely connected with us, by relationship, friendship, &c.; hence it is frequently rendered, a relation, friend, client, patron, &c.; homo tamen necessarius, Nep., i. e. related: mors hominis necessarii, i. e. of a friend, Mat. in Cic. Ep.: also, subst., Propinqua et necessaria, Cic., A female relative; familiaris ac necessarius, id., a friend: necessarius provincia, id., patrons or friends: Caerelliae, necessariae meae, id., a female client, friend, or relative.

NECESSE. (ne and cedo) is either neut. from necessis, e., or adv. from necessus, a, um, used as a neuter. I. Necessary, i. e. indispensable, unavoidable, not otherwise possible; homini necesse est mori, Cic., man must inevitably die: id quod necesse erat, Cic. red. Quir. 2, i. e. naturally. II. Needful, necessary; quod tibi necesse minime fuit, Cic. N. B. Necesse is followed, 1. By an infinitive; mori; see above. 2. By ut, that, Gell.: ut is frequently omitted; intimi multa vident necesse est, Cic.: boves vendat necesse est, id., he must sell. 3. By an accusative and infinitive; necesse fuit dari literas, Cic. 4. It is also rendered, They must, or simply, must; necesse est homini mori; see above: also, it is natural. We find also, necesse habere, for, I consider it to be necessary, I must, with an infinitive; Cic.

NECESSITAS, ātis, f. (necesse) I. Necessity, inevitableness, unavoidableness, i. e. when any thing cannot be altered, deferred, or hindered, urgency; exundi, Cic.: necessitate coactus, compelled, id.: necessitatem alicui imponere alicuius rei, id., to compel to any thing: thus also, afferre, id.: obrenit alicui necessitas; e. g. muneris, id., he is reduced to the necessity of, &c., he is obliged to do it: nec sibi ullius rei necessitatem injungebat, quin—persequeretur, Hirt., he followed without having respect to any thing else than necessity: necessitati parere, or serve, Cic.: to accommodate one's self to necessity; necessitates majores, Liv., urgent reasons, constraints, &c.: necessitatem persuadendi adhibere, Cic., to convince at all events, necessarily; hence, I. Unavoidableness, unalterableness; an unalterable arrangement, fate, destiny; naturae, Cic.: fati, Liv.: fatum affert vim necessitatis, Cic.: divina, id., fate; suprema, and ultima, death, Tac. 2. Necessity, i. e. an unavoidable or natural consequence; necessitate, Cic. Hor., do you not scruple: also seq. accus. et infin.; e. g. Theopompum nudum confugere Alexandriam negligistis, Anton. ap. Cic.: to look with indifference upon any thing that takes place; Gallias a Germanis vastari negligit, Suet. III. To pass over, not to heed; pecuniam captam, Cic.: vitam ereptam, id.—See also NEGLIGENS, and NEGLECTUS, a, um.

NEGO, avi, atum, ære. (perhaps from ne and ago, to say)

I. Intrans. To deny, refuse, say no; Ter.: alicui, Cic., to say no to any person, or to refuse him: also, alicui rei; e. g. petitioni, Fraj. in Plin. Ep., i. e. to refuse: thus also, cœnis, Mart., i. e. to decline. II. Trans. I. To deny, say that a thing is not so; aliquid, Ter.: si negas, Cic.: particularly, followed by an accusative and infinitive, where in English we use a phrase such as, I say (affirm, assert, &c.) that—not, &c.; nego, ullum vas fuisse, Cic., I say that there was no vessel: neget per omnes deos se meminisse, Tibull., would swear by all the gods, &c.: hence, Negor, They deny me that I, &c., or, they say (affirm) of me that I am not, &c.; casta negor, sc. esse, Ov.: negantur rane ibi coaxe, Suet., it is said they do not croak: also of things without life; sin (aræne) in sua posse negantur ire loca, &c., Virg.: we find also, nego me, negat se, with which an infinitive must be supplied from what precedes; ille primo se negare (sc. ducturum uxorem), Ter. Hec. 1, 2, 45.

N.B. 1. Also followed by quin; e. g. negare non posse, quin rectus sit, Liv., for, rectus esse. 2. Sometimes by a negative, which, however, does not destroy the negation; negato, esse nec mu nec mutuum, Plaut.: negat nec suspicari, Cic. 3. Sometimes two propositions depend upon nego, with the latter of which only dico must be supplied from nego; e. g. negat Cæsarem—mansurum, postulatque—interposita esse, Cic., where, with postulata, &c., understand dicunt. 2. To refuse; alicui aliquid, Cæs.: comitem negare, sc. se, to refuse to accompany, Ov.: also passivè; si tibi negabitur ire, id.: cupimus negata, id.: hence fig.; vela ventis, id., i. e. to furl: se vinculis, Tibull., to escape from: poma negat regio, Ov., denies, refuses, i. e. does not produce. 3. To be unwilling; Hannibalem pelli negabam, Sil. II. Active, busy; locus in ethice negotialis, Quint., that treats of things without regard to persons.

NEGOTIATIO, ðnis. f. (negotior) A being busy or concerned with any thing, especially, a being occupied in trade: in the time of Cicero this term appears to have been used only of the more honourable kinds of trade, as, of that of the knights, which consisted in lending money, in money-changing, and in large undertakings; reliquiæ negotiationis veteris, or Asiaticæ, Cic., i. e. the remainder of the money still to be gathered in: in the time of the emperors it signified, any trade or traffic; pecuaria, Colum.: sagaria, Pand.: negotiationes privato pudenda, Suet.

NEGOTIATOR, ðris. m. (negotior) One who concerns or occupies himself with any thing, especially, with trade; hence, one who carries on a trade, whether in money, cattle, &c. In the time of Cicero this name appears to have been applied only to those who were engaged in an extensive and respectable way of trade or traffic, such as were the equites, who lent or exchanged money, or entered upon large speculations, as the buying up of corn, &c.: hence, in the first instance it might be rendered, a money-changer, banker; in the second, an enterpriser, speculator; Cic.: Cicero distinguishes them from the mercatores, and from the publicani: but under the emperors every tradesman was called negotiator; vestiarius, frumentarius, Pand.: mercis sordide, Quint. Cf. Heindorf ad Hor. Sat. 1, 7, 4; and Ernesti Cl. Cic. s. v.

NEGOTIATORIUS, a, um. (negotiator) Of or belonging to trade or tradespeople; navis, Vopisc., a merchant-ship.

NEGOTIATRIX, icis. f. (negotiator) She that is concerned in any thing or that carries on a trade; Pand.

NEGOTIUMMUS, or NEGOTIUMMUS, a, um. (negotium and nummus) That costs money; Apul.

NEGOTIOLUM, i. n. (dimin. of negotium) A small affair or matter; Cic.

NEGOTIOR, atus sum, ðri. (negotium) Prop. To be occupied, to have an occupation: hence, to carry on a business, trade, traffic; Cic.: but in the times of Cicero perhaps only in the wholesale and in money-changing; under the emperors, however, it was said of every kind of business: hence, negotians, i. q. Negotiator, Cic.: negotiantes, especially (under the emperors), dealers in fruit and corn, fruiterers, corn-chandlers; Suet.: also fig.; anima nostra negotiari, Plin., to deal in human life, of physicians, i. e. to derive gain from.

NEGOTIOSITAS, atis. f. (negotiosus) Given by Gellius as a translation of πολιτευμασυνή, busy occupation.

NEGOTIOSUS, a, um. (negotium) Busy, full of business; provincia, Cic.: homo, Sall.: dies, a work-day; Tac.

NEGOTIUM, i. n. (for nec otium) Want of leisure.

I. Any business, any thing which one has to do, an affair, occupation, obligation, duty, concern; publicum, business or concern of office, Cic.: intelligebat, sibi cum viro forti negotium esse, that he had to do with, Nep.: quid tibi lic negotii esset, Ter., you could have to do: negotium suscipere, Cic.: alicui mandare, id., to commit, confide, entrust: also, dare, id., to give a commission: negotium suum præclare gerere, id.: ita negotium'st, Plaut., so it must be in negotio habuit obligare magistratus, Suet., considered it an obligation upon him, considered himself bound to, esteemed it important or of moment, &c.: especially, an undertaking connected with difficulty, unpleasantness, or great exertion; hence, of conspracles and civil commotions, Suet.: hence, I. Difficulty, pains, trouble, labour, exertion; magnum, Cic.: satis habui negotii in sanandis vulneribus, id., I had enough to do: sine negotio, Nep.: or, nullo negotio, Cic., without difficulty, easily: nihil est negotii, it is not difficult: it is easy, Cic.: neque de hac re negotium'st, quin, &c. 2. Featious, trouble, distress; negotium alicui facessere, or exhibere, Cic.: or, facere, Quint., to cause, give occasion: Pompeio est negotium cum Cæsare, Gel. in Cic. Ep., has trouble with him, i. e. a quarrel, dispute. II. A matter, thing; ineptum, Cic.: negotio desistere, Cæs., to leave off or desist from: hence, negotium male gerere, to manage matters ill, i. e. to be unfortunate; e. g. in one's circumstances, Cic. Cat. 2, 10. Negotium is frequently, with reference to legal proceedings, A matter of law; Suet.: also of persons, thing, i. e. person; inhumanum, Cic., for inhumanum homo, a stupid creature: Teucri illa lentum negotium, id., i. e. a long tedious affair.

III. A cause, reason; Plaut. IV. Trade, traffic, business, whether in goods or in money, in which sense we usually find the plural, i. e. money affairs; Cic.

NEMA, ātis, n. (νήμα) Yarn, thread; Pand.

NEMO, inis, c. (for nemo, from ne and the old homo for homo) I. No one, i. e. no person, nobody; nemo ex tanto numero, Cic.: nemo omnium mortalium, id.: also of a woman; vicinam neminem amo magis, Plaut.: hoc scio, neminem perperisse, Ter.: also followed by a verb plural; quum eorum nemo venissent, Liv.: nemo quisquam, Ter.; or, nemo unus, Cic.; or, unus nemo, Auct. ad Her., i. e. not a single person, no one: nemo alius, no other, no one else, Cic. N.B. 1. Non nemo, Cic., many, some one: nemo non, every one, all, id.: but before a repeated nec (neque), the negation remains; neminem nec deum nec hominem, id., no one either god or man: thus also, nemo, non lingua, non manu promittor, Liv.: thus also, ne legat id nemo—velim, Tibull., for ut nemo, &c. 2. Nemo, i. e. nemo, Ter. 3. Nemo, Nobody, i. e. A contemptible and worthless person; Cic. II. No (of persons); nemo homo, Cic.: nemo civis, id.: nemo Romanus, Liv.: nemo hostis, id.

NEMORĀLIS, e. (nemus) Of or belonging to forests or groves; Umbra, Ov.: templum Diana, id., i. e. in the grove near Aricia; thus also, regnum, id.; see NEMORENSIS, and NEMUS.

NEMORĒNSIS, e. i. q. Nemoralis. Of or belonging to a grove or forest; mel, Colum., i. e. made in a forest: especially, in, of or belonging to a grove near Aricia (where Diana had a temple); lacus, Propert.: rex, Suet., the priest at this temple.

NEMORICULTRIX, icis, f. (nemus and cultrix) She that dwells in a forest; Phaedr.

NEMORĒSUS, a, um (nemus) I. Full of woods or forests, woody; Virg.: Plin. II. Full of trees; silva, Ov. III. Bushy, woody; platanus nemorosa vertice, Plin.

NEMPE, interj. for namque. I. For; Cic.: nempe is never used for the explanatory word 'namely' (equivalent to 'that is'), but is for the most part used as a half interrogatory particle of assurance, so that a person, confident in his own assertions, proposes that the other should make some concessions, our, yet, however; hence it frequently expresses indignation, &c., and is also used ironically. Cf. Herzog. ad Hirt. B. G. 3, præf., respecting nempe, and its synonyms. II. Doubtless, without doubt, certainly, surely, evidently; Cic.: nempe enim, for at all events, Quint.

NEMUS, ōris, n. (νέσος) A grove, which contains meadows and pasture land for cattle (νέμα), in the same manner as sylvā denotes a wood or forest, in respect of trees; multos nemora silvaque commovet, Cic.: agri et nemora, id.: with the poets gen., a grove, wood, forest; Virg.: Ov. Nemus means especially a grove near Aricia, with a temple sacred to Diana, in which there were pleasure houses and villas; Cic. Att. 13, 4; see NEMORENSIS. Nemus is also used by the poets.

I. For, a plantation, and especially for, a vineyard; Virg. II. For, Wood, timber; Sen. III. Of, A thick, shady, and spreading tree; as, of the platanus, Mart.

NENIA, or NENIA, æ, f. A funeral song, dirge; Cic.: hence, I. A funeral song, fig., i. e. a mournful issue of a thing; Plaut. II. Gen. A song of lamentation, mournful ditty; Hor. III. An incantation, song of enchantment; Hor.: Ov. IV. Any common trifling song, a nursery song, &c.; Arnob., viles nenias, Phædr.: puerorum, Hor. V. Any song; Hor. Od. 3, 28, 16.

NEŌ, ū, i. e. non. Not; Lucr. NEŌ, ū, i. e. nētum, ēre, (νῆα) I. To spin; subtemen, Ter.: also fig.; inter se radices serpunt, mutuoque discursu tentur, Plin., are intertwined, entwine themselves. II. It seems sometimes to include the idea of weaving; tunican, quam molli neverat oro, Virg.

NEPĒTA, æ, f. A kind of plant (Nepeta italica, Willd.); Cels.

NEPOS, ōtis, m. (perhaps from νῆος, whence nevos, nepos, nephew; as, opilio for ovilio) I. A grandson; Cic.: also sometimes, nepos fratris, sororis, or ex fratre, sorore, a son of a brother or sister, a nephew, Tac. N. D. 1. With the poets, nepos is used for a descendant; Ov.: nepotes, descendants, posterity, Virg. 2. Also of animals, Colum. 3. A sucker, in a vine, id. 4. For neptis, A grand-daughter; Enn. II. A spendthrift, prodigal; as opposed to patruus, Cic. Benecke's derivation of nepos (ad Cic. Cat. 2, 4), from non and potis, as nemo from non and homo, and so, nepos, any one, qui sui non potens est, would be objectionable, even did not patruus (in the sense of a severe moralist), as the opposite of nepos, make against it.—Synon. Nepos, gen., a spendthrift, prodigal; ganeo, one who frequents houses of ill fame, a debauchee.

NEPŌTĀLIS, e. (nepos) Luxurious, extravagant, prodigal; Ammian.

N.B. I. Nescio an, I know not whether, i. e. in my judgment at least, in my opinion, probably, perhaps, with a positive affirmation: quod nescio an ulli acciderit imperatori, Dolab. in Cic. Ep. 9, 9; but here Ernesti reads nulli for ulli, under the mistaken notion that nescio an ought always to be followed by a negation, and in this he has been followed by many editors, by which means innumerable passages of ancient writers have been corrupted: partim ea sunt, quibus nescio an gloriari debeam, Liv.: ad supplicium, nescio an innocens, certe tanquam innocens, ducta est, Plin. Ep. But, when preceded by an, nescio expresses doubt, not positive affirmation; sed an hoc voluerint auctores, nescio, Quint. Respecting nescio an in general, see Cic. Cat. 4, 5, 9; Beier. in Excurs. 2, ad Cic. Læl. p. 202, sqq.: Stallbaum. ad Ruddin. Inst. Gr. 2, p. 236. In later writers also, nescio an expresses doubt; nescio an hoc quicquam admirabilis contigerit, Val. Max., 5, 2, 9, i. e. I do not know whether any thing whatever; Val. Max. 9, 3, 1: Plin. Ep. 7, 19, 4. Cf. Beier. l. c. p. 223, § 25. 2. Nescio quid, I do not know why, Ter. N.B. Quis i. nescio quid in all its cases and genders, expressing sometimes a real, sometimes a pretended ignorance; it may then for the most part be rendered, A certain, some, &c. nescio qua permotus divinatione, Cic., I do not know through what foreboding, or, through some foreboding (unknown to me): casu nescio quod, id.: in oppidum, nescio quod, id., i. e. a certain town, some town unknown to me: thus also, nescio quid; e. g. non paulum, nescio quid, id.: hence, nescio quid, in describing a great thing which seems to be beyond one's powers of description; tum illud nescio quid præclarum solet existere, id., that indescribable excellence: nescio quid esse putant, Ov., something excellent or extraordinary: rumoris nescio quid, Cic., a certain rumour: nescio quid exculpsent, id., something. Nescio quis, quid, &c., may frequently be rendered, Any one, some one, something, &c.; non breve, nescio quod, tempus, id., a (some) short time; and to this may be referred, illud nescio quid præclarum, that excellent something, or, something excellent: nescio quid esse putant, Ov., Nescio quid exculpsent, Cic.; see above.

3. Expressing a feigned ignorance, when one pretends not to know any thing on account of its insignificance: in this sense it may often be rendered, mean, trifling, poor: nescio quid literarum, Cic., a small letter: nescio quid illud fractum, &c., id., very unmanly: nescio quid dissentiens, id., i. e. a little: caudicum nescio quem, id. 4. Si nescis, if you are ignorant of it, if I must tell you of it, Ov. 5. Quodscis, nescis, Ter., i. e. you act as if you did not know. 6. Nescio quo modo, nescio quo pacto, I know not how, in what manner, are frequently used in expressions of indignation at any untoward or disagreeable circumstance of which one wishes that it could be otherwise; Cic. Muren. 27: cf. Beier. ad Cic. Off. l. 4, 146.

II. Not to be acquainted with, not to know; aliquid, Plaut.: deos, Ter.: vinum, Juv., to abstain from: non nescire hiemem, Virg., i. e. to know, see beforehand.

PARTUS, us. m. (pario) I. Birth, i. e. a bringing forth; Cic.: also of animals; Varr.: also of poultry, a hatching; Colum.: hence, the time of birth or delivery; Cic. N.B. Also of men, A begetting; (as the Gr. ῥίκος); Cic. e Sophocle: also of cocks; Varr. II. The infant, factus, young animal, whether brought forth or not; feræ partus suos diligunt, Cic., their young: partum ferre, or gerere, Plin., to be pregnant or with young: enitit, to bring forth young, Liv.: conjug sex partus enixa, Tac., i. e. children: edere, Cic., to bring into the world, i. e. to bear: abigere, id., to cause to miscarry: also of hens, and so, an egg; Apul.: partus Ledæ, Propert., i. e. the children of Leda, Helen and Clytemnestra: partus terræ, Hor., i. e. the Giants: also fig., of plants: e. g. of a vine, Varr.: of trees, Plin. N.B. Partu, for partui, Propert.

PARVUM, adv. (παῦρος) Compar. minus; Superl. minime. I. Parum, with and without a genitive, 1. Too little, not much, not enough, less than desired; parum sapientie, Sall.: parum id facio, id., to esteem little, make light of, scripsit non parum multa, Quint., tolerably many; parum consultis, Ter., not enough, not much: parumne est, quod, &c., Ter.: Cic., is it not enough: also with ut, for quod; Plin. Paneg.: also with an infinitive; Ov.: parum habere, not to be content with any thing, not to deem it enough, with an infinitive, Sall. 2. Not particularly, not very, not well, not properly, not as it ought to be; parum meminisset, Cic.: parum ditu, id. N.B. Parum, in classical Latin, never signifies little, but always has the signification of less than enough, less than one wishes, not enough, too little; it is the opposite of nimium. II. Compar. Minus, 1. Less; plus minus, Hirt., more or less, i. e. about: minus minusque, Ter.; Liv.; or, minus ac minus, Plin.; or, minus atque minus, Virg., less and less, continually less and less: nihil minus, Ter.; Cic., nothing less, i. e. by no means, not at all: non minus, Cic.; Liv.; or, haud minus, Liv., not less, no less, quite as: thus also, neque minus, Nep., and no less, and equally.

N.B. Minus is followed by quam, ac, or atque, i. e. than; Cic.: Virg.: Hor.: we also find the ablative, 1. For quam; e. g. nemo illo vitæ minus emax, Nep., less fond of buying than he: minimo minus, almost, within a hair's breadth, Apul.: quam is frequently omitted, and yet the ablative is not put instead, but (as with amplius, &c.) the case which would have been used had quam been retained, especially in the mentioning of numbers; the word minus may then be commonly rendered, 'under'; haud minus duo millia, Liv., not less than, &c., not under, &c.: minus triginta diebus, Cic., in less than, &c.: non dona minus quinque millium (daret), Liv., no present under five thousand asses. 2. To the question 'by how much?' facere dimidio minus palas, less by a half, Varr.: uo minus teste haberet, Cic., one witness less: generosæ (sues habent mammas) duodenas, vulgares binis minus, two less, and so, ten, Plin.; multo minus, much less, Cic.: paulo minus, somewhat less, id.: eo minus, so much the less, and quo minus, the less: thus also, bis sex cederunt, me minus uno, Ov., except myself alone, myself alone excepted. 2. Not remarkably, not very, none too, not as it ought to be; minus diligenter, Nep.: minus multi, Cic.: intellexi minus, Ter., not exactly. 3. Not so, not so much; minus infesta quam, &c., Liv. 4. Not, 1. After quo, that, or whereby; prohibuisse, quo minus, &c., Cic.: neque recusavit, quo minus pœnam subiret, Nep., he did not refuse to suffer: deterere, quo minus, Cic., from, &c.: also minus quo, for quo minus, Ter. N.B. Quo minus, the less, must be distinguished from this. 2. In the phrases, si minus, unless, if not, sin minus, but if not, otherwise, which are usually followed by at, tamen, &c.; e. g. si assecutus sum, gaudeo: sin minus, hoc me tamen consolator, Cic., i. e. but if not. 5. Too little, without, or usually with, plus, which then means, too much: dicere, Cic.: plus minusve faxit, Ter., too much or too little; or, in both these passages, minus may be the adjective. III. Superl. minime, 1. Least; Cic.: omnium minime, id., least of all: hence, minime, not at all, by no means; Cic.: also with gentium, Ter., by no means. 2. At least; Liv.: Colum. N.B. It is also written minime, Plaut.: Ter.: Sall.

PARUMPER, adv. (παῦρον πρῆ) I. A little while, a short time; Ter.: Cic. II. In a short time, quickly; Enn.—Synon. Parumper, in a little while, gives the idea of returning to that from which one set out: paulisper, during a short time, during a little while, denotes simply, a short space of time. Cf. Gernhard. ad Cic. Læl. 1, 5. Not infrequently, however, Cicero uses paulisper, where we should have expected parumper; although perhaps never the contrary. Cæsar does not use parumper at all.

PÄRUNCULUS, i. m. (dimin. of paro) A small boat or bark; Cic.

PÄRUS, i. m. A kind of small bird, a titmouse, tomtit; Auct. Carm. de Philom.

PÄRVÜLUS, a, um. (dimin. of parvus) I. Small, not great or large, petty; prellium, Cæs.: res, Cic.: pecunia, a little money, small property: hoc parvulum, this trifle, id.: ex parvulo incipere, Cæs., to have a small beginning: parvula laudo, Hor. II. Little, young; Æneas, Virg.: ætas, Justin.: parvulus, a little child, id.: a parvulo, Ter., from earliest childhood: thus also, ab parvulis, Cæs. (of several persons) III. Little; parvulum difert, or retert, Plin. Ep. 1, i. e. little. IV. Not a match for; illæ rei ego etiãmmunc sum parvulus, Plaut. Pseud. 3, 1, 17.

PARVUS, a, um. (from παῦρος, parvus, by a transposition of letters) Compar. minor; Superl. minimus. I. Parvus, a, um, 1. Small, i. e. not large; locus, Cic.: also, small, i. e. trifling, mean, weak, short; odor, Plin.: consuetudo, Ter.: tempus, Lucr.: nox, Lucan.: vita, id.: hence, Parvum, A little, a trifle, a little thing, bagatelle; Liv.: hæc parva sunt, Cic.: parvo plus, Liv., somewhat more, a little more: parvo post, a little afterwards, Plin.: contentus parvo, Cic., with a little: parvi pretii duerare, Ter., to value little, slight: also without pretii; e. g. parvi æstimo, Cic.; or, pendo, Ter., little: parvo vendere pretio, Cic.: parvo curare, id., to purchase for a trifle; parvi esse, Cic., to be of little value, to be worth little, esteemed little: parvi refert, Cic., it matters little: hence fig., Little; animus, Hor.: fides, Ter.: parvi (homines), i. e. humiles, Hor.: ea parva ducere, Cic., to value at a low rate: also, parvus, little, small in quantity; cruro, Lucan.: sucus, Plin.: hence, Parvum, A little; sanguinis, Lucan. 2. Small, little, i. e. young: hence, Parvus, A little boy; parva, a little girl; Ter.: Cic.: Hor.: parvi, little children; Cic.: also with ætate, Suet.: hence, a parvo, Liv., from his infancy; or, a parvis, of several persons, Ter.; or when a person speaks of himself in the plural number, Cic. N.B. Compar. parvior, Cælar. Aur.: and superl. parvissimus, a, um, Lucr.: and so, minor and minimus do not properly belong to this; we place them here however agreeably to custom. II. Compar. minor, 1. Smaller, less, shorter, prop. and fig.; res, Cic.: calceus, Hor.: pecunia minor facta, Cic., less: multa sunt minorã notitia tua, Ov., too little for you to have a knowledge of them, beneath your notice: numerus, Hirt.: hence, 1. Minoris, At a lower price, cheaper, for less, at less; vendere, Cic.: æstimare, Nep.; or, ducere, Sall., to value at less. 2. Inferior, in respect of strength, reputation, &c., Hor.: hence, also, as the Latin inferior, and the Gr. ἑννοῦν, conquered, overcome, inferior; minor in certamine longo, Hor.: also seq. genit.; minor captivis, i. e. capite deminutus, id.: it also signifies, maimed, mutilated; minor frontem, Sil., i. e. that has lost a horn. ² Less, usually in the neuter gender; minus prædæ, Liv.: minus nihilo, less than nothing, Ter.: also, too little; minus dicere, Cic. 2. Less, inferior in respect of years, i. e. younger, and, the younger (of two); filia, Cæs.: ætate minor, Ov.: qui minor est natu (by birth or in age), Cic.: aliquot annis minor, id., some years younger, younger by some years; but, minor viginti annis, Pand., that is not yet twenty years old: thus also, minor viginti quinque annis, id.: hence Gen., Minor, One who is under five and twenty years of age, a minor; Pand.: hence, Minores, 1. Younger persons, or, young persons, in respect of elder; Hor.: also, children; Sil. 2. Descendants, posterity; Virg. N.B. Quam is sometimes omitted after minor, although no ablative follows; obides ne minores octonum denum annorum, &c., Liv., not younger than, &c., not under eighteen years of age: naves, quarum minor nulla erat duum millium amphorum, not less than, &c., not under two thousand, &c., Lentul, in Cic. Ep. 111. Superl. minimus (minimus), a, um, 1. The smallest, or, very small; res, Cic.: pars temporis, Cæs.: altitudo, minima de malis, sc. eligenda. 2. The smallest, lowest, least; sumptus, Plaut.: pretium, Hor.: hence minimi facere, Cic., to value very little: minimo emere, sc. pretio, Plaut. 3. The least, in respect of age; i. e. the youngest; with natu, Cic.: and without natu, Justin. 4. The least, very little; cibus, Ov.: the neuter minimum, the least, very little, is more frequent; firmitatis, Cic.: hence, Minimum, A very little thing, a trifle; Ter.: Cic.: hence, Minimum, adv. 1. The least, very little; valere, Cic.: dormire, Plin. Ep.: quæ non minimum commendat, Nep., i. e. not a little: ne minimum quidem, Cic., not in the least, not at all. 2. At least; Varr.: also, least, i. e. most seldom; Plin. N.B. PĒR, prep. (from πέρω, to pass through) I. Through. 1. When it denotes a passing through; per membranâs oculorum cerere, Cic. In such instances we frequently say in English, Over, down, along, &c.; per forum ferre, Cic.: per gradus dejicere, Liv., to throw down the steps: per agros vagari, Liv., over the fields. 2. Of time, denoting continuous time and successive events, During, throughout, in, at, for; or it may frequently be omitted in translation; decem per dies, Cic.: per idem tempus, id., at the same time: per ludos, Liv.: per indutias, id. 3. By, through, denoting an instrument or means, By means of; statuerunt Injurias per vos ulcisci, Cic., through your means: per me, per te, &c., i. e. through me, &c., frequently means, alone, without the assistance of any one, by myself, yourself, &c., by my, &c. exertions; per me tibi obstiti, Cic.: per se cognatus, id.: hence, per se, of themselves, by other thing or person, absolutely, Cic.: also with ipse, a, um, id.: also with solus, a, um; e.g. Liv. 1, 49, which is redundant: per se ipsa maxima est, Cic.: again, per insidias, id., by treachery, treacherously; per Cœcilium accusatur Sulla, id., through Cœcilius, &c., i. e. under pretence of accusing Cœcilius, they accuse Sulla; thus per frequently means, under pretext or pretence of, under colour or appearance of; fraudare aliquem per tutelam aut societatem, Cic.: per fidem fallere, id., under colour of security. II. On account of, through, for the sake of, out of; per avaritiâ decipere, Cic.: per causam belli renovati, Liv.: hence, I. In entreaty, when it is also rendered, By, or, for the sake of; oro te per deos, Cic.: also in exclamations; per deos immortales! Cic.; heave in! per deos atque homines! id. N.B. In this instance per is also separated from its case; per vos, fidem vestram, Liv., where per belongs to fidem, and vos is the nominate: per ego te deos Oro, Ter., for, ego te per deos oro. 2. With words expressing hindrance, opposition, permission, and gen. power or inability; for, on account of, for the sake of, in respect of; per me stertas licet, Cic., as to me, as far as concerns me: si per vos licitum erit, id.: quum per valetudinem posses, id.: per hunc nulla mora est, Ter.: per me trahatur, Cic., as far as I am concerned, it is nothing to me. III. In swearing, affirming, assuring, commanding, when it is rendered, Eys; jurare per deos, Cic. IV. For in. 1. To the question, where? especially when a large extent or circuit is spoken of; qui per imperii tui provincias ei credidissent, Cic., i. e. in the, &c.: per silvam procubuit, Virg., in the wood; per omnia, every where, in all things or parts, Cels., Liv. 2. To the question, whither? invitati per domos, Liv.: iactata per undas, Ov.: ire per umbras, Virg., into the infernal regions; per amplum mittitur Elysiun., id. 3. To the question, when? per idem tempus, Cic.; see above: per somnum, id., in sleep: per otium, id.; per tempus advensu, Ter., at the right time, opportunely. V. For inter, Among; ire per terras, Ov.: ire per umbras, among the shades, i. e. in the infernal regions; see above. VI. For post, After; ire per tempora longa, Ov. VII. Before, or by; incedere per ora magnifice, Sall. VIII. With; per caput, Catull. IX. It frequently expresses a way or manner, and may be rendered, In, to, by, with, out of, according to; per ludum et jocum, Cic., in play and joke, i. e. playfully; per ordinem, in order, according to order. Quint.: per literas, by writing, by letter, Cic.; per speciem, in appearance, Liv.: per occasionem, id., as opportunity offers; per insidias, Cic., by treachery, treacherously; per summum dedecus, id., in a disgraceful manner. X. B. 1. Per is sometimes put after its case; quem per, Cic. 2. In composition, especially with an adjective or an adverb, it commonly denotes, Very; as, perfacilis, &c.; it is also frequently separated from its word; per mihi mirum visum est, Cic., for permirum mihi, &c. From the original signification of per, through, i. e. from one end to the other, arises the notion of completeness or perfection, Thorough, and through, as in percutere, pernicities; or with some kinds of motion, over and over, entirely around, as in percellere, pervertere; and also the notion of utter destruction or ruin, as in perdere, perire. Per also communicates an unfavourable notion to a verb with which it is compounded, as in perjurare, to swear falsely. See Döderlein, Synon. 1, pp. 50, 52.

The pilum, a dart or javelin of the Roman infantry, which they hurled at the enemy, and then immediately fought with the sword*; Cic.: Liv.: they were also used at sieges, where the besieged hurled pila upon the besiegers; such pila were called pila muralia, Cæs.: hence, pilum injicere alicui, Plaut., proverbially, to make an attack upon. III. Ibo latavum in Pilum, Plaut., seems to be without sense: Lambinus reads, in Pyelum, i. e. in the bath. IV. Loco, qui nunc Pila Horatia appellatur, Liv., and soon after, intra illa pila, &c., for which the modern reading is, intra illam pilam.

PILUS, i. m. A company of Triarii (see TRIARIUS), called also Pilani (see PILANUS): hence, primus pilus, for which we find also primipilus, I. The first company of the Triarii; centurio primi pili, Sall.: Cæs.: primum pilum ducere, Cæs.; Liv., to be the first centurion among the Triarii; assignare primum pilum, Liv.: primos pilos ademit, Suet.: or both these passages may be referred to III.; hence, pilus, for primus pilus, Mart. I, 32, 3. II. This centurion himself was called primus pilus; Liv. III. The rank or post of this centurion, the first centurionship; ad primipilum (primum pilum, ed. Cellar.) se transducere, Cæs. B. C. 3, 53, ed. Oudend.: primum pilum assignare; see above: primos pilos ademit; see above: also simply, pilus, for primus pilus; see above. N.B. In all passages, primus pilus is more correct than primip. or primop.: yet we find primipilo, Val. Max. I, 6, II, ed. Torren.: and primipilum, Cæs. ed. Oudend.; see above.

PILUS, i. m. A hair; palpebræ sunt munite vallo pilorum, Cic.: hence fig., a hair, i. e. a trifle, a little; pilo minus amabo, Cic., a whit the less: e Cappadocia ne pilum quidem, sc. accipi, id. ne ullum pilum viri boni habere dicatur, id., not a hair of an honourable man: non facit pili cohortem, Catull., values it not a straw: nec pili cuncti unitis, id., cares not for, makes no account of it.—Synon. Pilus denotes a single hair, particularly of animals; and for the most part a short shaggy hair; crinis, properly, any hair, then by way of distinction, the hair of the head, represents the same simply as of natural growth: capillus and coma in themselves denote the hair of the head; capillus rather as the covering of the head, and with reference to the roots of the hair; coma (in general the nobler expression) as an ornament of the head with particular reference to its length: cæsaries, almost equivalent to coma, denotes, however, rather the majestic appearance of the hair: cirrus is a natural lock of hair; cincinnus an artificial one.

PŒENA, æ. f. (ποίησις) 1. Money paid as satisfaction for a murder, and, in a wider sense, satisfaction given or received for a crime or any injury committed or sustained; hence, it may be rendered sometimes, revenge, sometimes, punishment; pœnas domestic sanguinis expetere, Cic., to demand reparation for the blood that has been shed in the family, or, to avenge the blood that has been shed: pœnas parentum a filius repetere, id., to punish the children for the (murdered) parents, or, to avenge the murder of the parents upon the children: pœnis hominis persequi, id., to avenge any person: thus also, pœnas patrias (i. e. patris) persequi, id.: pœnas capere pro aliquo, Sall., to avenge any person: ab aliquo petere pœnas sui doloris, Cic., to seek to obtain satisfaction from any one for one's pain, i. e. to take vengeance on him for the pain endured: pœnas verborum capere, Ov., to take vengeance on account of words: accipere pœnas, to take revenge on any person, or, to punish any one, Lucan.: pœnas habere ab aliquo, Liv., to have revenge, i. e. to have revenged one's self: but, penam habere, id., to have his punishment, i. e. to be punished: pœnas dare alicui, Cic.; or, reddere, Sall., to give satisfaction, be punished: pœna vite, Cic.; or, capitis, Cæs., capital punishment: pœna aliquid afficere, or multare, Cic., to punish: pœnas capere de aliquo, Liv.; or, sumere, Virg., to punish him: in pœnas ire, Ov., to punish: teneri pœna, Cic., to be liable to, to have incurred a penalty: pœnas alicui pendere; e. g. alicuius rei, id., on account of any thing; or, dependere, expendere, solvere, persolvere, id., i. e. to suffer punishment, be punished: sustinere pœnam, id.; pœnas sufferere, id.; subire, id.; perferre, id.; luere, id.; ferre, id.; or, pati, Ov., to suffer punishment, be punished. II. Vengeance, as a goddess; o Pœna! o Furia sociorum! Cic.: a liberum Pœnis actum esse præcipitum, id.: Pœnæ nocentum, Lucan.: grandæva Furorum Pœna parens, Val. Fl. 1, 798; cf. Drakenborch. ad Sil. Ital. 2, 551. III. Any trouble, pain, plague, evil, adversity, calamity; pœna pariendi, Plin. Also, ill treatment, misusage; crudelis sumere pœnas, Virg., to treat cruelly, of conquerors towards the vanquished; Sen. Hippol. 429; Justin. 3, 5. IV. Payment of any thing; as, of a forfeit at play, victam pœna sequatur, Ov.: votorum of his vows, Virg.—Synon. Pœna, punishment imposed by way of reparation: noxa, as the pain felt by punishment suffered: supplicium, especially, capital punishment, and hard punishment: multa, pecuniary punishment, a fine: castigatio, chastisement, especially with a view to correction: animadversio, reprehension, censure.

PŒNALIS, e. (pœna) Of, belonging or tending to, punishment, penal; opera (sing.), Plin.: aquæ, sc. the infernal regions, id.: actio, Pand., for the punishment of a crime which had remained unpunished: homo, Cod. Just., liable to punishment.

PŒNITĒO, ui, ēre. (pœna) I. To repent, to be grieved or sorry for, regret; si pœnitere possint, Liv.: Pœnitens, That repents, repentant; Cic.: pœnitens consilii, Sall.: Pœniturus, a, um, Sall.: Pœnitendus, a, um, to be repented of; Liv.: thus also, vii pœnitendi, of repentance, Cic.: pœnitendo, by repentance, id. II. To repent, i. e. cause repentance or regret. 1. With a subject nominative; conditio me pœnitet, Plaut.: id me pœnitet, Gell.: quod pœnitere possit, Cic.: thus also with an infinitive which is used as a subject; me pœnitet didicisse, id. 2. Often impersonally, i. e. without any subject nominative, when it takes an accusative of the person that repents and a genitive of the thing repented of; populum iudicii pœnitēbat, Nep.: sometimes the person that repents or the thing repented of is not at all expressed; solet eum pœnitere, Cic.: pœnitet et torquor, Ov. III. To be discontented or dissatisfied with any thing, then the person dissatisfied (if mentioned at all) is put in the accusative, and that with which he is dissatisfied in the genitive or infinitive (or, it is expressed by particles), and so the verb is used impersonally; quid eum Mnesarchi pœnitet? Cic.: suæ quæque fortunæ pœnitet, id.: an pœnitet me, quod transduxerim? Cæs.: haud me pœnitet sententia eorum, Liv., I am not at all displeased with the opinion of those, &c.: quum jam virum haud pœnitēret, id.

PŌTĒSTAS, ātis. f. (possum) I. The power of doing any thing, power over any thing; power, ability; qui habeam tantam potestatem astutiae, Ter., can be the author of such cunning: habere potestatem vitæ necesse in aliquem, Cic.: pari potestate, with equal power, Liv.: esse in sua potestate, to be one's own master, Nep.: mihi est potestas, or, est in potestate mea, Cic., it is in my power, I can: jam istam volucrum fore potestatem, Suet., i. e. would depend upon the birds: esse in potestate allicujus, means also, to obey; Cic.: Liv.: habere familiam in sua potestate, Liv., to keep, retain in his power, i. e. not to manumit: in potestate mentis esse, Cic., to be in one's right mind: exisse ex, or de, potestate (sc. mentis), Cic., to have lost the power over one's senses, to be out of one's mind: hence, 1. Power, sovereignty, dominion, rule, empire, government; Thessaliam in potestate Thebanorum redigere, Nep.; also, sub potestate redigere, Nep. Milt. 1, 4: also of single magistrates; authority; prætoria, Cic.: when it may be rendered, the power or office of a magistrate, or simply, office; in this relation potestas differs from magistratus, by signifying any office of state, so far as it is considered as delegated, subject to the supreme power and defined by laws, while magistratus denotes any office of state so far as it enjoys complete power and the right of command generally: severe præfuit ei potestati, Nep.: dissimilato potestatum, Cic., of offices: censors potestatem gerent, id., bear an office: it is also used for, the person who fills this office; a magistratu aut aliqua potestate — evocatus, id., some lawful authority: hence, hominura divumque potestas, of Jupiter, i. e. king, Virg.: thus also, potestates, Suet., provincial governors or authorities. 2. Power, virtue, effect, efficacy, operation, effectiveness; herbarum, Plin.; perniciam, Pan., i. e. value: colorum, Vitr., i. e. properties, qualities: hence, 1. The meaning of a word, signification, import: potestas, Nature, natural virtue or quality; in potestas, state of things; Gell. 2. The nature of circumstances, state of things; Gell. 3. Power or ability: i. e. opportunity of having success: agenda dignitatis, Cic.: quoties mihi certorum hominum potestas erit, id., opportunity of having (meeting with) trustworthy persons, sc. to send a letter by them: liberius vivendi fuit ei, Ter., i. e. he might have lived more freely: facere sui potestatem alicui, to give any one an opportunity of receiving from one what he wishes; hence, 1. To give an opportunity for fighting, engage in a fight; Cæs.: Nep. 2. To allow others to see or have access to one, to grant an audience; Cic.: thus also, sui conveniendi, id.: potestatem sui non habuissent, Suet., had not been admitted to an audience: thus also, potestatem sui (adeundi) præbere, Suet., to give or grant an audience. III. Power, permission; facere alicui potestatem, to give power or permission; interpellandi, Cic.: senatus populi potestatem fecit, for populo, Liv., placed it in the power of the people: fit mihi potestas tabularum, Cic., I may make use of them.—Synon. Potestas denotes a power acquired by laws or decrees; whereas potentia is that which is obtained by force, artifice, &c.: or rather, potestas includes all the rights allowed to any one, whether by the law of nature, or by the laws of a state, or through the pleasure of an individual; potentia is the power or political influence acquired by any one for himself, whether by popularity, friends, clients, eloquence, or force of arms.

life-guards of the emperor, as a reward of their services; Symm.

PRÆROGĀTIVUS, a, um. (prærogo) I. That is asked before others for his opinion, that votes before or first; centuria, Cic.; and simply, prærogativa (sc. tribus, or centuria), Cic.; Liv., i. e. the tribe or century, which, by virtue of their lot, voted first in the comitia: we also find the plur. prærogativæ, Liv. 10, 22, because they were of two kinds, juniorum and seniorum: also, prærogativa collective, with a plural; prærogativa tribunalium erant, id., for prærogativa. N.B. Prærogativam referre, Cic., of the herald or crier who informed the magistrate presiding at the comitia of the vote of the century that voted first; for the other tribes or centuries usually followed the prærogativa: hence Prærogativa means, 1. A previous or first election; militaris, or comitorium militarium, Liv.: equitum, id. 2. A sure token, prognostic, favourable omen, pledge; triumphi, Cato ap. Cic.: voluntatis, Cic. 3. Preference, privilege, prerogative; Plin.: Pand. II. Of or belonging to the above-mentioned century or tribe (prærogativa); omen prærogationem, Cic., for prærogative, or prærogativarum: or we may here very well consider prærogativum as the genitive (contract.) of prærogativarum: thus we find also, amphorum, &c.

PRÆRŌGŌ, āvi, ātum, āre. I. To ask before another, ask first; hence, to propose or make a motion beforehand; lex prærogata, Cod. Theod., a law which had previously been proposed. N.B. PRÆRŪTILUS, a, um. Very red; Tert. Carm. de Jude.

PRÆS, adis, m. A bondsman, surety, especially in money matters; prædem esse pro aliquo, Cic.: prædes dare, id.: prædibus ac prædiis cavere populo, id., an old formula, to give security to the people by means of bondsmen and their property; pleonastically, for prædes means also the property of bondsmen; prædes tuos venderet, id.—Etymol. Præs seems to have been only another form of Pres, from πρᾶσιαι, which gives in the active πρᾶσιαι, or πρᾶσιαι, for πρᾶσιαι, whence in Latin præo, pres, as præo, præo, although in a somewhat different signification. Præs at first probably signified a buyer, dealer; hence, pretium, a price; interpres, a factor, broker, agent, negotiator; and interpretum, the profits of a factor, brokerage. But præo seems used rather in a figurative sense of one who pledges his property: hence, prædium, property that may be pledged; as, præda, property acquired, or spoil, booty.—Synon., see VAS.

PRÆS, adv. (apparently formed from præ, as in Greek, πρᾶσιαι, from πρᾶσιαι), or in Latin, abs, from ab; by which means præ-sens and abs-sens may be explained) i. q. Præsto, There, at hand; ibi præ est, i. e. adest, Plaut.

PRÆTOR, Æris, m. (for prætor, from prætor) Prop. Any leader, head, chief; hence the consul or chief officer of state was formerly called prætor maximus, Liv. 7. 3; also simply, prætor, Liv. 3. 55: ararii, Tac., master, president; especially, I. Of military rank, Commander, general, &c., στρατηγός; but perhaps not at all of Roman commanders, though frequently of foreigners; as, of the Athenians, Nep.: Cic.: of the Thebans, Cic.

II. In civil life, A principal, chief, director, master, head, superintendent; ararii, see above: and this was the title of the chief magistrate at Capua, Cic. Agr. 2. 34, i. e. mayor, boroughreeve, &c.: thus also at Carthage, Nep. Hann. 7, where it denotes a civil magistracy. Prætor is particularly the title of, A chief magistrate at Rome, who administered justice, and ranked next to the consuls; Cic. In the time of Cicero there were eight prætors at Rome. Of these, two were employed in private causes (causæ privatz) respecting property, &c.: one of them was called prætor urbanus, city judge, who presided when both parties at variance were cives, i. e. possessed of the right of Roman citizenship; the other, prætor peregrinus, foreign judge, when both parties (or only one of them) were peregrini, i. e. not possessed of the right of Roman citizenship: the other six were concerned with causæ publicæ, as, murder, adultery, ambitus, &c. These eight prætors committed the examination of causes to inferior judges (iudices selecti). The prætors wore a toga prætexta, sat on curule seats (sellæ curules), and were preceded by six licitors: their office lasted a year: they afterwards went to a province assigned to them by lot (in which there was no army), as governors, in order there to administer justice (i. e. all that the eight prætors in Rome did), and were then called Proprætores; such a governor however is frequently called Prætor, as in Cic. Verr. 2. 4. 12; 4. 25, 56. The administration of all prætors, both at Rome and in the provinces, consisted in two things, namely, in edicto, et decretis ex edicto; see JURISPRUDICTIO. N.B. I. The office of prætor was first instituted at Rome, A. U. C. 385: partly, because the consuls, on account of the great number of wars in which they were obliged to command, could no longer attend to the administration of justice; partly, that by this means the patricians (for at first the prætorship belonged exclusively to the patricians) might have some compensation for sharing the consulate with the plebeians. 2. At first there was only one prætor: Sulla made their number six, Cæsar eight, Augustus sixteen. 3. Prætor, for consul, Cic. ad Div. 2. 17. 6 (12); Verr. 3. 54. 4. Prætor primus, Cic., i. e. the first elected: some understand it of the prætor urbanus.

Cat. 60, 5, on the cohorts prætoriana; again, navis, Liv., the admiral's ship, commander's ship: classica, Propert., i. e. the signal of the general, as, for an attack: imperium (in a fleet), i. e. command, Cic.: porta, Cæs., the gate of a camp, where the general had his tent. II. *Of, belonging or relating to the prætor or prætors at Rome; comitia, Liv., the election of the same: turba, Cic., i. e. that frequented the said comitia: jus, id., i. e. proceeding from a prætor, consisting in his sentences: hence, actio, Pand.; exceptio, Cic., customary there: potestas, id., the office of a prætor: vir prætorius, or simply, Prætorius, sc. vir, A prætorian man, i. e. one that has been prætor; id.: also, a man of prætorian rank; Plin. Ep. III. *Of, belonging or relating to a proprætor: domus, Cic., the house or palace of a proprætor in a province. N.B. Prætorium, subst. 1. Sc. tentorium, or tabernaculum, A general's tent; Cæs.: Liv.: and since councils of war were held therein, hence, a council of war; dimittere, or mittere, Liv., to dismiss, break up; also fig., the habitation or cell of the queen bee is called prætorium, Virg. 2. U. C. 604, were called questiones perpetuae, id., because from that time they were annually held under the superintendence of the praetor; but there were also questiones extraordinariae, i. e. extraordinary trials, trials under commission, which did not always take place before the praetors; Liv. He who conducted these criminal trials under the direction of the praetor, and was chief judge, was called iudex questionis, Cic., as it were, vice-director of criminal processes. 3. An examiner, or a judge himself; Val. Max.: thus also, questionem dimittere, Cic.; or here it may very suitably mean, to postpone the examination. III. A subject of inquiry and examination, a question; de natura deorum, Cic.: Academica, Cic. Att. 13, 19, where Cicero alludes to his work entitled Questiones Academicae: questionem sustinere posse, Cic., to be equal to the subject: hence especially, 1. A subject of debate with orators; Cic. 2. The chief point of debate; Cic. Invent. 1, 13.

QUESTIONARIUS, i. m. (questio) A torturer, executioner; Hieron.

QUESTUINCULA, æ. f. (dimin. of questio) A little or trifling question; Cic.

QUESTOR, oris, m. (for questor, from quero) I. A seeker, searcher; Plaut. II. An examiner, inquirer into any thing, investigator; parricidii, Fest. e. Legg. XII. Tab.: Pand. III. A questor (because he seems formerly to have conducted the trials in criminal cases), i. e. a magistrate who superintended the revenues of the state. The chief of these was the questor at Rome (questor urbanus, or ærarij), who had the charge of the ærarium or public treasury, and when his year was expired, usually accompanied a governor into a province as pro-questor. His office was the lowest of those tried for by the distinguished and noble; and he could not ordinarily be elected to it under the age of five and twenty. Also a questor used to go out in every war, to pay the soldiers, and take possession of that part of the spoils which belonged to the state. There were questors in the provinces, who collected the revenue and sent it to the treasury at Rome; and when there was an army there, paid its wages. All questors, except the one at Rome, were properly called Proquestores, but frequently, Questores; e. g. Cic. Verr. 1, 15; Nep. Cat. 1: hence fig.; non questor imperii (i. e. in imperio meo), sed doloris mei (i. e. in dolore meo), Cic. N. B. In the time of the emperors there were other Questores, who took care of despatches and subscribed their names: they are called also questores candidati, and candidati principis: cf. Ern. ad Suet. Oct. 65.

QUESTORIUS, i. m. I. Of or pertaining to the questor, questorian, officium, Cic., the office of a questor: scriba, id., i. e. of the questor: seclus, id., committed in the questorship or by a questor: scriptum questorium comparare, Suet., the office of writer to a questor: ager, land taken from the enemy and sold by the questors, Sicul. Fl.: hence, questorium, sc. tentorium, the questor's tent in a camp; Liv.: also, sc. ædificium, &c., the residence of the questor in a province; Cic.: porta questoria, id., the gate in a camp near the questor's tent, i. q. Decumana. II. Questorian, i. e. belonging to the questors, filling the office of questor; of questorian rank; legatus, Cic.: questorius, sc. vir, id., that has been questor.

QUESTURIUS, a, um. (questus) That carries on a trade or profession by which money is gained; mulier, Pand.; and simply, questuarial, Sen., a prostitute for money.

QUESTUOSE, adv. Advantageously, with gain or profit; questuosus, Plin.: questuosissime, Sen.

QUESTUOSUS, a, um. (questus) I. Advantageous, profitable, gainful; mercatura, Cic.: res questuosissima Verr. id.: est multo questuosius, id. II. Greedy or desirous of gain; homo, Cic. III. That has much gain or advantage; Tac.

QUESTURA, æ. f. (questor) I. The office of questor, the questorship; Cic. II. For, The questor's chest; Cic. Verr. 5, 58, translator questura, i. e. who robs the chest and gives the money to another.

QUESTUS, us, m. (quero) I. A seeking, gaining, making, getting; pecunia, Cæs. II. Profit, gain, advantage; cum questu dimittere, Cic.: quibus fides, decus — questu sunt, Sall., i. e. who, as it were, deal in these things: in questu esse, to bring gain, Quint.: habere questu remp., Cic., to derive profit from one's services to the state, to enrich one's self by this means: pecuniam in questu relinquere, id., to put out money upon interest: intercipere alicuius questus, Plin.: also fig., profit, gain, advantage; nullum in eo facio questum, Cic. III.

Any employment, trade, or profession attended with profit or advantage; as, of parasites; Ter.: of day-labourers and others, Cic.: especially of prostitutes; questum facere corpore, Plaut.; and without corpore, Ter., to be a prostitute. N. B. Genit. questi, for questus, Ter.
