QUI, qua, quod. I. Who, which, interrogative or referring to is, ea, id, or some other antecedent: in interrogations it may frequently be rendered, what? and then we much more frequently find quis for qui, and a new neuter, quid? what? and so, qui or quis, quæ, quod and quid, is used both in exclamatory interrogation; quis clarior? Cic.: qua stultitia fuit Roscius? id.: quid aliud agimus? id.: and without interrogation and exclamation, when it usually has a conjunctive; si considerabis, quid potuerit, &c., Cic. N.B. 1. It is frequently found for qualis; e. g. quis videor? Ter.: quid mulieris habes? id.: Xenophon, qui vir! Cic., what a man! 2. Quis quem, quis cui, &c., e. g. considera, quis quem fraudasse dicitur, Cic., who deceived the other, properly, who deceived, and whom he deceived. 3. For quisque; e. g. quantum quis professor erat, &c., Tac. 4. Quis, gen. fem.; e. g. quis illæc est mulier? Varr., who is that woman? also neut.; e. g. scortum ne quis seadeit, id.: 5. Especially observe quid. 1. It frequently takes a genitive after it, i. e. What? or, what kind of? or, how many? how much? quid causæ est, for quæ causæ est, Ter.: quid mulieris? what a woman, id.: quid hominis sit, what kind of a man he is, Cic.: quid picturam tabularum? id., what number of pictures? how many pictures? sciturum, quid ejus sit, how far it is true, whether it be true, id.: quid hominum? what people? how many? Ter.: quid is also used with a substantive of the same case; quid est tibi nomen? Plaut.: quid videtur tibi hoc mancipium? Ter. 2. Quid? What? or, how? quid? eundem destituit? Cic. 3. Quid? quod, i. e. What shall I say thereof? that, &c.; Cic.: and it may frequently be rendered, yea, or, nay, nay even, more than this; id. 4. Quid, i. e. Why? wherefore? quid venisti? Plaut.: lætus est nescio quid, Ter., I know not why: sed quid argumentor? Cic.: and for this we find, in quid? for what purpose? why? Sen.: hence, quid ita? why that? how so? Cic.: quidni? why not? Ter.: Cic.: also separated; quid illam ni, &c., Ter.: also with non, which is redundant; quid ni non permitam? Sen. 5. Quid? si, i. e. what if? how if? Ter.; Cic. 6. Quid? Again, farther; Cic. 6. Quis, for uter; Liv. 7. Quis, for quomodo; e. g. quis vocatur, Plaut.: thus also quid; e. g. quid tibi visa Chios? Hor. 8. Qui, for si quis; e. g. qui rem æstimare velit, Liv. II. One, any one, for aliquis; e. g. injuriam qui facere, Cic.: especially after si, nisi, ne, quo, nam, &c.; e. g. si qui, id.: num quod vestigium, id.: si te quis, &c., id.: also in this case, for quæ, we frequently find qua, but also quæ; Varr.: Cic.: therefore also, qui (abl.); e. g. si qui, for si qua, if perchance, Liv.: si qui, if perchance, id.: ne quid, lest perchance, that by no means, Cic. III. Who, which, referring to is, ea, id, or some other word: in this use quis, quid, does not occur. N.B. 1. It agrees with its substantive if standing with it, in gender, number, and case; but if not standing with it, in gender and number; coloniam, quam Pregelias appellat, Liv.: but, 2. Anomalies of all kinds are to be observed. 1. It frequently agrees with the word following (the predicate); locus in carcere, quod Tullianum appellatur, for qui, Sall.: domicilia, quas urbes dicimus, Cic. This mode of speaking, however, ought not to be called an anomaly, but an idiom of the Latin language, since the regular construction (coloniam, quam, &c.) ought just as much to be considered an exception, which is used only when the name is foreign, and is considered more as a sound than as a substantive of a fixed gender; see Ochsner ad Ecl. Cic. p. 30: and Zumpt. Gr. § 60, 2, 4, obs. 2. It also agrees in case with a word that goes before; eorum, quorum consueti, Cic., for quibus. 3. It agrees with the preceding only in sense; illa furia, qui, &c., for quæ, Cic., because Clodius is meant: earum rerum, quæ prima mortales ducent, Sall. 3. It often expresses, By virtue of; quæ tua natura est, according to your disposition; Cic.: quid meus in te amor est, id., by virtue of (according to) my love: pater, quæ severitate fuit, id., according to his, &c. 4. Also, in interrogations, the particle ne is affixed; quemne ego vidi? whom have I seen? Ter. 5. Quod, followed by a genitive, especially when it signifies, So much, or, as much as (quantum); e. g. quod operæ poneretur, Cic.: quod ejus (agri), so much of it, Liv. 6. For ut; e. g. dignus sum, qui laudem, I am worthy to be praised, I deserve to be praised: dignus est quem laudemus, he is worthy or deserves to be praised: thus also, nemo est tam afflictus, qui non possit, &c., that he cannot, as not to be able, Cic.: non videt id (i. e. tale quid) se cupere, quod si (i. e. ut, si id) adepti fuerint, fugitive concedi necesse sit, id.: ea (i. e. talia) me suavis, quibus si (i. e. ut, si) parisset, &c., id. N.B. With this use of qui, we always find the conjunctive mood. 7. For quum ego, quum tu, quum is, &c., Since I, &c., also, in that I, &c.; hopes, qui nihil suspicatur, since, because he, Cic.: videtur sapiens, qui absis, that you are absent, in being absent, id. 8. For nam (et vero) ego (tu, ille, &c.); e. g. fortuna vicissitudines, quæ etsi, &c., for, nam (atque) etsi, &c., Cic. 9. Qui, for utnam, Ter.: Cic. 10. Qui, for quæ; e. g. ut qui, &c., Plaut. Asin. 3, 1, 2. 11. It is redundant; ut qui illi crederem, that I should believe, as to believe, Plaut. 12. It is sometimes at a great distance from the word to which it belongs; Qui (sc. Antonius) si scisset, &c., Cic. Phil. 1, 5. 13. Quo (abl. neut.), The, with comparatives; quo suaviores, eo, &c.; Cic.: also, in order that; quo leviores, &c., Liv.: also for quo magis; e. g. eo minus—quo videbatur, Auct. ad Her.: ex quo, for ex quo tempore, Liv., since, from the time that: also, quo, as an old dative; alterum, quo ipse pastor mederi possit, Varr.: It is also frequently used as a particle; see Quo. 14. Qua, Where, whither, how, partly; see Qua. IV. N.B. Genit. quibus, for cuius, Plaut.: quol, dat., for cui, id.: plur. quos, for qui, Enn.: queis, or quis, for quibus, Hor.: Virg.: observe especially the ablative qui, for quo, qua, quibus; e. g. quicum, for quocum, Cic.; and for quocum, Virg.: for quibuscum, Plaut.: hence, 1. In order that; non qui narret, Ter.: homines sunt hac lege generali, qui tuerentur, &c., Cic.: also simply, that; as, after efficere, Ter. 2. Whereby, whereof, wherein, by, of or in which; qui, qui efferrerit, vix reliquerit, Nep.: qui utar, i. e. unde vivam, Cic.: amator exclusus qui distat? Hor.: ædificante casus qui sanior? id. 3. For utinam; Ter.: Cic. 4. How, in what manner; Ter.: Cic.: also, how, why, or wherefore; Ter.: hence, qui dum? how so? why? id.: qui fit, ut, &c., Cic., how is it, &c.: we also find qui, for quanti, Plaut. 5. That, or, hence; Plaut. Pseud. 1, 5, 58. V. This word is also frequently put before propositions; quocum, Cic.: quibuscum, id.: quas contra, id.

QUI, How, &c.; see QUI, quæ, quod. QUIA. Conj. (the old plural of quia) I. Because; Cic.: quiane, in interrogations, Virg. N.B. 1. Quia enim, for quia, Ter. 2. Quianam, Why, wherefore; Virg. II. That, i. e. because; irata est, quia non redierim, Plaut.: also, that, where we otherwise find an accusative and infinitive; Pallad.—Synon. Quum, denotes, 1. The logical reason, i. e. it is used, when judgment is employed, to connect two things together, as cause and effect, or to derive the one from the other; and then takes a conjunctive. 2. The internal connection of two judgments, namely, where the one idea does not proceed from the other, but two ideas are involved in each other, our 'whereas,' and it then takes the indicative; quum hoc modo accusas, nonne hoc palam dicis?—Quoniam denotes a moving cause, and is only then used for quia, or quum, when the reason is clearly made out, especially with the idea that a thing is fixed and unalterable.—Quia and quod express the ground or reason, i. e. are used when two things are put in connection with each other, in such a manner that the one seems immediately to proceed (as an effect) from the other, since.

to have reference to another, to refer to any thing; divinationem ad naturam deorum, Cic.: omnia ad voluptatem corporis, id.: ad fructum, Varr., to look to the use;
 hence, 1. To make one thing accord with another, to adapt; consilia et facta ad dignitatem, Cic.: omnia ad suum arbitrium, id. 2. Referri, To have reference, belong or relate to, to concern; hoc referatur ad te, Cic.: thus also, referre, sc. se; ad virtutem, id. III. To bear, bring, carry; opem, Cic., to render assistance; fructum, id.: se referre cubiculo (i. e. in cubiculo), Apul.,
 to betake one's self, to retire; consulatum ad patrem, Cic.:
 hence, 1. To bring, apply, turn, direct to any thing; animum ad veritatem, Cic.: gemmam ad os, Ov., i. e. to hold at; manum ad capulum Tac.: oculos in aliquem, Virg. 2. To deliver, give in; rationes ad ærarium, to give in an account, Cic.: hence, 1. To convey, report, bring, deliver; mandata, Cæs.: responsum, Cæs. B. G.
 1, 35: Liv. 37, 28. 2. To make an (official) report or give an account; legationem, to give an account of the embassy; prerogativam (centuriam), Cic., i. e. to report the votes of. 3. To relate, say, report, narrate, mention, cite, recite, repeat; quom relatum legent, Nep.: versum Homeri, id.: recta facta, Hor.: alicui consilia, Ter.: also seq. acc. cum infín., Liv. 3. To bring or lay before,
 ad aliquem; when it may often be rendered to consult;
 ad senatum referre, or simply, referre, to bring before the senate, to make a motion in the senate (but deferre ad senatum, to give information to the senate, to report to the senate); this was done by the consuls and tribunes of the people, and in the absence of the consuls, by the prætor urbanus; and sometimes any principal senator was allowed to make a motion, after having given his vote; hence, sententiam simpliciter referre, Cic., to deliver his opinion in the senate: ad populum, before the people, id., for which we usually find ferre ad populum: ad haruspices ostenta, id.: ad oracula, Nep., to consult: ad consilium (council of war), id.: also, ad hominem; e. g.

 ad me ne referent, Cic., that they should not consult me;
 thus also of one who states his case to an advocate and takes his opinion, id.: hence fig., to consult; ad se ipsum, id., i. e. to ask himself: ad animum, Phædr. 4.
To enter (in a list or register); in tabulas publicas, Cic.: thus also, rationes in tabulas, id.: senatus consulta, sc. in ærarium, id.: nomen in codicem, or in tabulas, Cic. Rosc.
 Com. I., to enter in an account-book: thus also, in rationibus, Cic.: in libellum, id.: hence, 1. Acceptum alicui referre, to enter to one's credit in an account-book; see ACCIPIO. 2. To reckon, number, or count among;
 in reos, in proscriptos, Cic.: in deorum numero, id.; or, numerum, Suet.; or, in deos, Cic., to reckon among the gods: hence, causam rei ad aliquem, Tac., to ascribe the reason or impute the fault: numerum (ovium) referre, to count, Virg. N. B. Referre, for in rationes referre;
 e. g. operi publico referunt, Cic., they enter the money for a public building, i. e. they enter the money with this title or memorandum, 'for a public building.' IV. To accomplish, effect, bring to pass; decretum sine cæde nostra, Liv. N. B. Refert, impers.; see REFERT.

REFERT, impers., has nothing to do with the personal verb referre, but consists of the words re and fert written together (not compounded), as republica consists of the two words res publica. The phrase refert is allied to another, e re est, and signifies properly, as συνάγει, conduct, it is conducive to one's interest (res); hence, it concerns, imports, &c. It is used sometimes without a nominative (subject), sometimes with one, which however is seldom any other than a pronoun, quod, id, illud, &c.
 How much any thing concerns or imports is expressed by the adverbs magnopere, nihil, &c., and especially by the genitives magni, parvi, quanti; but the thing or person whom a matter concerns is sometimes found with ad, rarely in a simple accusative or genitive: hence, we frequently find the feminine ablatives mea, tua, sua, nostra, vestra (with long a in the comedians) and eja (for genitive ejus); e. g. magnopere refert id ipsum, that very thing is of great importance, Cic.: parvi refert, abs te jus dici, id.: magni refert, quid, &c., id.: refert etiam, qui audiant, id.: quid refert, utrum, &c., id.: quod tua nihil referat
 id.: mea minime refert, Ter.: quod retulit? what has it profited? id.: multum refert, quid, &c., Quint.: illud permagni referre, Ter.: tua, quod nihil refert, does not at all concern you, id.: quanti id refert, Cic.:
 quam ad rem istuc refert? what purpose does it serve?
 Plaut.: quid id ad me refert? id., what was it to me?
 quid te (for ad te) retulit? id., what was it to you?
 illorum magis, quam tuo retulisse, Sall.: plurimum refert compositionis, Quint., i. e. in respect of: we find also a dative; cui rei retulit? what purpose did it serve?
 Plaut.: As that which is of importance or concern is frequently put in the infinitive, so refert is sometimes followed by ut instead of this infinitive; Colum.: illud permagni referre, ut, &c. Ter.

SĀTIUS, adv. COMPAR. Satius. I. Posit. Satis. (from ἄλις)

1. Enough, sufficiently, with or without a genitive; satis temporis habere, Cic.: satis jam verborum sat; Ter.: satis est, Cic.: quibus non fuit satis consules spondere, Liv.: se satis amobus venire (for esse), Virg.: also with a substantive, when it is used as an adjective; vix satis otium suppeditare, Auct. ad Her., i. e. sufficient leisure: thus also, satis consilium habere, Cic.: satis veterator, id.: it is often found with adjectives, adverbs, and verbs; satis multa, i. e. enough, id.: neque satis mirari, Ter.: satis audacter, Plaut.: satis cum periculo, Ter.: hence, de hoc satis, sc. dictum est, Cic.: thus also, sed satis de hoc, Nep. Observe especially its connection with certain verbs. 1. Satis agere, or satagere, To have one's hands full of business; see SATAGO. 2. Satis habere, To have enough, regard as enough, to consider sufficient: hence, to be content or satisfied; satis habeant se defendere, Nep.: satis habes, nihil me conqueri, Cic.: satis superque habere, quod, &c., id.: also seq. accus.; id, Plaut., i. e. to be content with it: thus also, illud, Nep. 3. Satis facere, or satisfacere, To satisfy, give satisfaction; see SATISFACIO. 4. Satis credere, i. q. Satis habere, To be content or satisfied; Sil. 5. Especially, with accipio, do, exigo, offero, peto, &c., it denotes, Sufficient security or bail; satis accipere, to receive or take sufficient security, Cic. Verr. 1, 45: also passivè; quæ satis accipiunda sunt, satis accipiatur, Cato, i. e. with which security is to be received: hence fig.; satis acceptum habere, to be sufficiently assured, be quite certain, Plaut.: again, satis offerre, to offer security, Pand.: satis petere, to demand security, id.: also seq. genit.; fideicommissi (sc. nomine), id.: satis dare, or, satsidare, to give security; see SATISDO: satis exigere, to demand security, Pand.: also, satis cavere, to give security, id. N.B. Satin'; see SATIN'.

2. Well, enough, well enough, sufficiently; non satis intelligebam, Cic.: plus quam satis est, id.: plus satis, more than too much, Ter.: satis magna copia, Cæs.: also, tolerably, moderately; satis literatus, Cic.: satis magnus, Cæs.: satis bene pascere, Cato ap. Cic., indifferently. Cf. Colum. præfat. 6: Plin. 18, 5; where we find mediocriter pascere, in the same connection.

II. Comp. Satius. 1. Adj. Preferable, better; satius est, Ter.: mori satius esse, Cic. 2. Adv. Rather (for potius) satius dicam, Varr.: multo satius cavendum putavi, Cic.—Synon. Satis, enough, so that no more is needed; abunde, more than enough; affatim, enough, even to weariness, so that one is capable of no more, Affatim, therefore, denotes sufficiency, subjectively and relatively; satis, objectively and absolutely. One may have done affatim (in his own opinion), but not (really) satis.

SĀTISACCEPTIO, ōnis. f. A taking or receiving security, admitting to bail; Pand.—From

From this word (satūra) the word satira is said to have been formed, i. e. A satire; for which some write satyra, and many suppose that a satire is so called from its comprehending many different subjects and kinds of verse. This may apply to the satires of Varro, but not to those of Horace and Persius; see SATYRA. It happened in this case, as in many others, that while the thing changed, the name continued the same. In the satires of Lucilius, which preceded those of Horace, we find that ancient mixture of subject and versification, which is denoted by the name.—Satira is the best mode of spelling, for the old Satūra.

SED. I. But, discretive; Cic.: sed enim, for sed, Cic.: Virg.: Ov.: also, sed enimvero, Liv.: with autem redundant, Virg.; hence, 1. But, when a speaker corrects or augments what he had said before, when it may often be rendered, yes, yea; clavus? sed probas, Plaut., i. e. yes, good ones: hence, sed etiam, but also, yea also, even; avarissime, sed etiam crudelissime, Cic.: defuit sed etiam obfuit, id., i. e. yea, even. 2. When the context has been broken by a parenthesis or in any other manner by the insertion of several words, it is usual for sed (like ergo, igitur, inquam) to begin the clause which follows, and to restore the connection, when it may be variously rendered, But, now, I say, &c.; ut peroravit (nam — peregerat), sed ut peroravit, &c., Cic. II. But, adversative; Cic.: thus also, sed etiam, sed et, sed quoque, but also: enim is sometimes put with it redundantly, Virg. N. B. 1. Etiam, quoque, et, are often omitted; negotiis non interfuit solum, sed præfuit, Cic.: non modo utilitatis, sed dignitatis, id.: also, modo, solum, tantum, with non, are often omitted, and non is followed by sed (verum) etiam (quoque, &c.); e. g. non mihi cum Eumene — sed etiam vobiscum, Liv.: or simply, sed, Virg. Geor. 3, 178. In Suetonius we frequently find sed et, without non solum foregoing. It is sometimes used in the beginning of a sentence, and means, Moreover. 2. Sed is sometimes omitted; sacrificus, for sed sacrificus, Liv. 39, 8. 3. Set, the old form for sed; e. g. Ter. ed. Beutl. — Synon. Sed, ἀλλὰ, is used in the manner above described: at (poët. ast), ἀλλὰ μὲν τοι, but however: atqui, ἀλλὰ μὲν, but now, usually in syllogistic forms: autem, δὲ, copulative, is a particle used for the most part in transition and continuation: enimvero, but truly, is frequently used as an expression of unwillingness or displeasure.

IV. Triticum, Plin.; see SĒTĀNIUS.

SĒTĒGER, a, um. (seta and gero) Bearing bristles, bristly; sus, Virg.: hence, setiger, for aper; Ov.

SĒTŌSUS, or SĒTŌSUS, a, um. (seta) Full of bristles or strong hairs, bristly, hairy; aper, Virg.: pectus, Cels., hairy: verbera, thongs, Propert., hairy, of skin.

SĒTŪLA, or SĒTŪLA, æ. f. (dimin. of seta) A little bristle; Arnob.

SEU. Is the same as sive, from which it is formed.

I. It is put twice or more often in a sentence. 1. When each seu (or sive) has a separate verb, or when the first seu (sive) begins a period and belongs to a verb; then it means, Either if—or if, whether—or; seu maucant, seu profisciantur, whether they remain, or, &c.; Cæs.: seu recte seu perperam facere coeperunt, excellent, Cæs.: sometimes aut is put for the latter seu; e. g. seu imber proluit, aut annis solvit vetustas, Virg.: and sometimes one seu is omitted; tollere seu ponere vult frata, Hor.: 2. When that is not the case, then seu (sive)—seu (sive) means, Either—or, for which we may say, whether—or; seu—sive, Cæs.: seu—seu—seu, Liv.: sive—seu, id.

II. A single seu is used. 1. Before a word, Although, and if, or if, even if; Seu mare per longum cogit ire, &c., Propert.: 2, 26, 29. 2. After a word, Or; nuncios seu potius Pegasos, Cic.: matri seu novercæ, Liv.: prora cubile mihi seu mili puppis erit, Propert.:

SINUATIO, onis, f. (sino) A curving, bending; a curve, bend; Fulg.

SINUM, i, n. SINUS, us, m. and SINUS, i, m. (from diver) A kind of large-bellied earthen vessel for wine or milk; Plaut.: Varr.: Virg.

SINUS, avi, tum, ère, (sino) I. To bend, curve; arcum, Ov., i. e. to bend a terga, Virg.: serpens sinuatur in arcus, i. e. sinuat se, Ov.: luna sinuata in orbem, Plin.: vallis sinuata latus, Calp. II. To excavate, hollow, cut; Cels. 7, 2.

SINUOSE, adv. Full of curves or folds; hence fig.; dicere sinuosius, Gell., i. e. more obscurely, or intricately.

SINUOSUS, a, um, (sinus) I. Full of folds, bendings, turnings, windings or hollows, winding, bent, sinuous; vestis, Ov., full of folds: folia sinuosa lateribus, Plin.: flexus (anguis), Virg. II. Fig. Narratio, Quint., full of digressions: quaestio, Gell., full of difficulties, intricate, perplexed: in sinuoso pectore, Pers., in my inmost heart, in the bottom of my heart.

SINUS, us, m. Any surface bent inwards, or semi-circular hollow; hence, I. The bosom, i. e. the folds of a garment which cover the breast; and probably the sinus togæ, i. e. the large lappet formed by throwing the gown over the left shoulder, formed a part of this bosom (sinus), or the bosom itself: and so sinus may sometimes be rendered, the lap. The Romans made use of this fold in the toga as a pocket, in which they carried letters, purses, daggers, &c.; and hence Augustus used to cause the sinus of persons approaching him to be searched; sinus ponderat, Propert.: manum inferre alicui in sinum, Ter., to put his hands in any one's bosom: cedo literas ex ipsius sinu, Cic.: sinus denotat esse, the part of the body covered by this fold of the toga, the bosom, the breast; metu micuere sinus, Ov.: sinus meos fugit, Propert., i. e. shuns my embrace: hence, 1. Sinus, of that which is done in secret; gaudere in sinu, Cic., to rejoice secretly; Angl., to laugh in one's sleeve. 2. Of great love; in sinu est meo, Cic., i. e. he is tenderly beloved by me: in sinu gestare, id., i. e. to esteem highly: hence, in sinu amici deferre, Plin. Ep., to shed tears in the lap or bosom of a friend: in sinu avi falsa perdidicere, in daily intercourse with, Tac.: Bibulum noli dimittere ex sinu tuo, Cic. 3. The inmost part of a thing; in sinu urbis sunt hostes, Sall. 4. A hiding-place, lurking-hole; ambitiosus, Tac. 5. Fig. A refuge, place of safety; confugit in sinum tuum resp., Plin. Paneg. 6. For Power; opes in sinu praefectorum fore, Tac.: in sinu meo habui, Pandect., in my power, at my disposal. II. Any bent surface or curvature, sometimes, a hollow, cavity. 1. Of a serpent, A fold, wreath, spire; Cic. 2. The bend of a pruning-knife, Colum. 3. Of hair, A ringlet or curl; Liv. 4. Of a garment, A fold or plait; sinu ex toga factio, Cic.: sinus fluentes, Virg.: to this belongs especially, sinus togæ, the lappet formed when the toga was thrown over the left arm; see 1. Hence, sinus means, A garment (but perhaps only a folded or plaited garment), either of women or of men; Ov.: Stat. 5. Of a net, The hollow or aperture; Plaut.: hence, a net, Juv.: and hence, a spider's web; Plin. 6. Of a sail when the wind fills it, A swelling sail; sinus implere secundos, Virg.: pleno pandere vela sinu, Ov. 7. Of waters, A bending, winding, a bay, zulf, frith, creek; Cic.: maritimus, id. 8. Terræ, A hollow, opening, abyss; Sen. N.B. Sinus, A kind of vessel; see SINUM.

SINUS, or -UM, i, n. (σίνω) A kind of plant, water-parsnep, Sium latifolium, L.; Plin.

SIPARIUM, i, n. perhaps, A small curtain in a theatre; post siparium, Cic.: auleo subducto et complicitis sipariis, Apul.; so that Apuleius makes a distinction between auleum and siparium: it appears that siparium was used in comedy, and not in tragedy; verba cothurno, non tantum sipario, fortiora, Sen.: also, a curtain or screen over the judge's benches, to keep off the rays of the sun; Quint.

SIPHO, or SIPHON, onis, m. (σίφων) A tube or pipe.

I. A pipe or tube from which water runs out, a water-cock, faucet; Sen. II. A pipe by which, in conflagrations, the fire was extinguished, a kind of fire-engine; Plin. Ep. III. A pipe by which liquids are drawn from casks, a siphon; Cic. N.B. It is written also, sifo, sifon.

SIPHUNCULUS, i, m. Dimin. of siphon; Plin. Ep.

SIPTACHORA, æ, f. (σιπταχώρα) A kind of tree, growing in India, and yielding amber; Plin.

SIQVA, or SI QVA, Perhaps; see SIQUIS.

SQUANDO, or SI QUANDO, for si aliquando, If ever, if at any time; Cic.: it is found also without a verb, if ever a thing has happened, or is to happen, i. e. now especially; nunc mihi, si quando, — favete, Ov.

SQUIDEM, or SI QUIDEM, I. If indeed; Ter.: Cic. II. Although; Plaut. III. Since that, inasmuch as, since; Cic.: Cæs.: Ov. N.B. With the poets, si in siquidem is short.

SQUIS, or SIQUI, SIQUA, SIQUID, SIQUON, or properly, SI QUIS, SI QUI, SI QUA, SI QUID, SI QUOD, for si aliquis, &c.,

If any one, if any; see SI, QUI and ALIQUIS. N.B. 1. Si qui, or si qui, i. e. si qua ratione, if in any way, for any means; Liv.: for this we find si qua (sc. ratione), Virg.: Liv. 2. Si quo, or si quo, for si aliquo, If any whither; si quo—misit, Cic.: also, if for any purpose; si quo—opera opis esset, Liv. 3. Si qua, for si qua, Cic. 4. Si qui means also If by any means; Virg.; see QUI and ALIQUIS.—Synon. Si qui is used for the most part as an adjective, with a substantive; si quis, commonly as a substantive. We may observe, also, the following distinction, that si qui, si qua (fem. sing. et neut. plur.), denote, if a person or thing, &c.; whereas, si quis, si qua, denote, if any person whoever, if any thing whatever, &c. Cf. Beier ad Cic. Offic. 2, 21, 74.

TŪFUS, or TŪPHUS, i. m. A kind of porous stone, which is easily crumbled, sand or gravel stone; Virg.

TŪGA, æ, f. (tego) Properly, A covering; hence, The upper garment of the Romans, a loose flowing gown or robe, which was the characteristic part of their dress, as the pallium among the Greeks. The toga was woollen, usually white, and made of a single piece of cloth. It was worn over the tunica in such a manner that the left arm was covered, but the right was at liberty. It was worn by all the Romans in time of peace, and hence toga is put for, peace, time of peace; Cic.: but we find mention of toga in the army; Liv. 29, 3. The toga was of several kinds; pretexta, a toga fringed with purple, worn by young people and by superior magistrates; see PRÆTEXO: pura, a pure white toga; such was usually worn by men after the age of seventeen, hence called virilis, Cic.; and libera, Ov., because children received greater liberty when they assumed this gown: picta, embroidered, Liv.: palmata; see PALMATUS: candida, i. e. of a bright white colour, such as was worn by persons canvassing for an office, who were hence called candidati: græcænicæ, i. e. made in the Grecian manner: sordida, sordid, not white or clean, Mart.: pulla, of a dark colour, worn in mourning, Cic.: purpurea, for kings, Liv. N.B. I. The toga began to grow out of use in the time of Augustus (Suet. Aug.), but continued to be worn on all public occasions in the city (Sen. Ep. 18, 115), particularly by advocates (Quint. II, 3, 131). In the country the toga was hardly ever worn, Mart. 10, 47, 5. 2. The toga was anciently worn by women as well as by men (Varr. ap. Non. 14, 25); but afterwards matrons wore another outer robe, called stola; and the use of the toga was left to courtesans, and the like; Hor.: Mart.: Juv.

TŪGĀTĀRIUS, i. m. An actor in a Roman play, i. e. one in which the characters and actions were Roman; Suet.

II. A kind of prickly plant growing in water or in marshes, Trapa natans, L.; Plin.: hence, III. A triangular instrument thrown on the ground in order to harass an enemy, and especially the cavalry, a caltrop; Veget.

TRIBŪNALĪS, ālis, n. (for tribunale, sc. suggestum) A tribunal, i. e. a stage or raised semicircular or square floor upon which magistrates sat on their sella curulis when transacting public business; it was used by the consul when superintending the comitia, Liv.: especially, by the prætor at Rome and the prætor or proconsul in a province, when administering justice or fulfilling some other public function; Cic.: also his council sat with him, and other persons as a mark of honour, id.: hence, præ tribunali, and de tribunali, id., for, in tribunali; e. g. præ tribunali agere aliquid, id.: de sella (curuli) ac tribunali pronuntiatur, id.: hence, tribunal, i. e. homines sedentes in tribunali, Hor. Ep. 1, 16, 87: the prætor had also a tribunal in the theatre; Suet. N.B. 1. A mound or monument in honour of the dead; Tac. Ann. 2, 83. 2. In later times, Any raised place, mound, as, a dam against water; Plin.: hence fig., height; honoris, Apul.

TRIBŪNĀTUS, us, m. The tribuneship, office of a tribune. I. Of a tribune of the people; tribunatus plebis, Cic.: and without plebis, id. II. Of a military tribune; militum, Plin.: and without militum, Cic.

TRIBŪNICIUS or -TIUS, a, um. Of or pertaining to the tribunes, tribunician. I. Of or pertaining to the tribunes of the people; potestas, Cic.: collegium, id., i. e. tribunorum: comitia, id.: leges, id.: candidatus, id.: tribunicus (sc. vir), one who has been a tribune, id. II. Of or pertaining to military tribunes; honor, Cæs.

TRIBŪNUS, i, m. (tribus) Properly, A president, chief, or commander of a tribe. I. Tribuni ærarii, Cic.; or, æris, Plin., i. e. persons (not magistrates) who assisted the questor in the payment of money; Cato. When the administration of justice was divided between the three orders of the state (the senate, knights and people), the tribuni ærarii became judges on the part of the people.

II. Tribuni Celerum. The commander of the royal body guard; Liv. III. Tribuni, in the army; or tribuni militum, Liv.: or, militaires, id., Military tribunes; officers attached to the legions of infantry, at first three to each, afterwards four, and lastly six: the corresponding officers of cavalry, and of the allies, are called, not tribuni, but præfecti: they were called comitatus, because elected by the people in the comitia: in later times each cohort seems to have been commanded by a tribune; tribuni cohortium, Cæs. IV. Tribuni militum consulari potestate, Military tribunes with consular power; i. e. who had the same power and dignity as the consuls, were for the first time chosen instead of consuls, A. U. C. 310. The people desired that the consuls should be elected from their body. The patricians and senate were opposed to this, and would not allow the consulate to be contaminated by the ignoble (plebeii); but when they perceived that they could not hinder it, they contrived that instead of consuls there should be chosen tribuni militum consulari potestate, the number of whom was not fixed: there were sometimes three, sometimes four, sometimes six. In the year A. U. C. 310, therefore, were elected tribuni mil. cons. pot.; in the years 311 to 315, consuls were again chosen; in the year 316, trib. mil. cons. pot.; in the years 317 to 320, consuls: and thus the elections varied until the year 388, which was the last of tribuni mil. cons. pot.: for in the year 389, consuls were elected, one of the name of Sextius, being from the people; after which the consulate remained; Liv. V.

VI. Tribuni plebis (or plebei, Liv.; also, plebi, id.; see PLEBES), Tribunes of the people; their origin was as follows. When the people were oppressed by debt, and were maltreated by their creditors, and received no protection from the senate, in the year A. U. C. 261, they removed from Rome to the hill called Mons Sacer, and did not return until the senate granted them magistrates for themselves, to be elected from their own body, who should protect them from the oppression of the senate. These were the tribuni plebis. At first there were two of them, Liv.: in the year A. U. C. 283, five, id.: although from the very first, the two tribunes chose three colleagues, id.: in the year 297, ten; and, by virtue of an ordinance, they were elected in the comitia tributa, id.: and at this number they remained, id. They were from the ordinary rank of citizens (do plebe), but possessed great power: they could, by the veto veto, protest against any decrees of the senate, and proceedings of magistrates, whether prejudicial to the citizens or not; and their authority was so great, that a decree of the senate could not come into force, if the tribunes of the people had protested against it. They were sacrosancti, i. e. no one dared, under pain of death, to lay hands upon them. The senatus consulta, or decrees of the senate, were subscribed with the letter T, as a proof that they were sanctioned by these tribunes; Val. Max. They had viatores instead of lectores, to wait upon them and fulfil their commands; Liv.: Gell. They were the guardians of the rights of the citizens against the encroachments of the senate. Hence their doors were not allowed to be closed, even by night, that the people might have recourse to them at all times; and one of them was obliged always to be on their seats (subsellia) in the forum, in order to be ready at hand, in case of an appeal to them. They were not allowed to be absent from Rome; Gell. There are numberless examples in Livy of the manner in which they were troublesome to the generals and senate, and stirred up the people against them. One tribune could protest against and invalidate a decree of the rest; and the senate often availed themselves of this, and gained over one tribune or more to act against the others; examples of this are not rare in Livy. And so at first they were not senators, i. e. did not sit in the senate, but had a place before the senate-house, where they received the decrees of that body, and either approved or rejected them. In order, therefore, to make them more favourable to the senate, it was at last decreed that they should be senators: for in the year 623, a law was made that none but a senator should be made a tribunus plebis. Sylla abridged their power by taking from them the right of proposing laws to the people, Cic.: Cæs.: again, he ordained that any one who had been a tribune of the people, should not be capable of receiving any other office. But this was repealed by Cotta, Pompey, and Crassus. That, in the time of Cicero, the tribunes had the power of proposing any thing in the senate, and of assembling that body, may be seen from Cic. ad Div.; Cic. Phil.; Gell. 7, 8. N.B. When Augustus desired to become absolute, he could express his purpose by no milder term than that of assuming the potestas tribunicia, Suet. Aug. 27 (cf. Tac. Ann. 3, 56), which denoted the highest power in Rome.

TRIBUO, ui, itum, Ere. I. To give, present, bestow, impart; aliquid misericordiam, Cic. to have compassion on; silentium orationi, id., to give a silent hearing to: suum cuique, id.: beneficia aliquid, Nep.: vocabula monti, to give a name, Ov.: aliquid magnam gratiam, to return thanks, Cic.: uni omnia, id., to give, commit: ut munus, me tribuente, feras, Ov., from my hand. II. To ascribe, attribute, impute, assign; aliquid culpæ aliquid, Nep.: hence, 1. To interpret as; aliquid aliquid superbæ, Nep., to impute to him as proceeding from pride: thus also, quod illi tribuebatur ignavie, Cic. 2. To concede, grant, allow, yield, give up to; aliquid priores partes, Cic.: aliquid valetudini, id.: commendationi tantum, id.: hence, aliquid multum, to pay great regard to, place great confidence in, expect much from, have a high opinion of; quibus plurimum tribuebat, id.: mihi omnia tribuebat, id., valued me above all: again, ordini publicanorum liberalissime, to humour, id.: in vulgus, to serve every one, id.: aliquid honori aliquid, i. e. facere propter honorem, Tac.: thus also, observantiam officio, non timori neque spei, Nep., i. e. propter officium, non propter, &c.: also with ne; Tac. III. To bestow upon, spend upon; dies rebus, Cæs.: tempus literis, Nep. IV. To divide; rem in partes, Cic. V. To distribute; pecunias, Tac.

TRIBUS, us, f. (τρίβυς, Æol. τριβύς) A tribe, i. e. a division of the Roman people; Rome was divided at first into three tribes, but the number was gradually increased to thirty-five, of which thirty-one were country (rusticæ) and four city (urbane) tribes. At first the city were more honourable than the country tribes; but when the censor Q. Fabius Maximus had placed all the meaner people in the city tribes, the country tribes became the more respectable. Hence, tribu movere, Cic., to degrade, remove from one's tribe, a mark of disgrace inflicted by the censor: tribum ferre, i. e. suffragia tribus, Liv.: tribus jure vocatæ, id., i. e. which voted after the prerogative: pro tribu fieri ædilem, i. e. per tribum prærogativam, id. N.B. 1. When the people voted according to the tribes, the assembly was called Comitia tributa. 2. In Cic. Agr. 2, 2, tribus seems to stand for centuria; probably, in later times, the word was used to denote any division or class. 3. Tribus, plur., The people, common people; equitem imitatæ tribus, Flor.: in quo nasci tribus negant, Plin.

So long, as long as; followed by the particles dum, donec, quoad. 1. When these particles signify 'until'; usque, dum — scierō, Cic.: usque, quod ei nunciatum esset, &c., id.: usque donec, &c., Plaut.: thus also, usque quo, until, Varr. 2. When these particles signify, 'as long as', 'or', 'all the while that,' and then usque is redundant; usque, dum licuerit, tenuisse, Cic.: so long as while, all the while that: usque dum, &c., Ter.: usque, quoad, Varr.: also, usque dum — usque, Ter., i. e. as long as — so long will I. III. Even, as far as, until, all the while. 1. To the question, whence? usque a mari, Cic.: usque ex Syria, id.: also after a preposition; ab usque Pachyno, Virg.: oceano ab usque, Tac.: also with istinc; e. g. quod eos usque istinc exauditis putem, Cic., heard even from where you are. 2. To the question, whither? or how far? whether a place, person, or thing be referred to; often followed by a preposition; usque in Pamphyliam mississet, Cic.: usque in adventum, &c., Liv.: usque ad necem, Ter.: usque ad Numantiam, Cic.: usque sub ora, Ov.: but the preposition is not used before the names of towns; usque Romam, Cic.: Miletum usque, Ter.: and sometimes not before other words; usque diem, Cels.: terminos usque Libyam, Justin.: usque initium, Liv.: ab eo usque Jovem, Plin.: usque is also followed by adverbs of place; usque illo, as far as, Plin.: also with persons; vos usque, Stat.: also of time, usque a, and usque ad; e. g. usque ab heroicis ducta temporibus, Cic., from as far back as the heroic ages: usque a Thale, id.: inde usque repetens, id.: usque ad extremum vite spatium, id., to the very last of life: usque ad eum finem, id., i. e. so long; usque adhuc, Ter.; see below: usque in adventum; see above: also in an inverted order; ad usque ludibria, Gell.: inde usque, Cic.; see above: also without ad; e. g. usque diem; see above: also, usque ad, up to, i. e. with the exception of; assenserunt omnes usque ad Pompeium, Plin. Ep., every one but Pompey with usque, until, we find the particles adeo, eo, quo, &c. 1. Usque adeo. 1. So long, so far (usually followed by donec, quoad, dum, &c.); usque adeo, quoad, Cic.: usque adeo, donec, Plaut.: usque adeo, dum, Plaut., so long as; Ter. 2. So much, so, to such a degree; usque adeo, ut, &c., Cic.: 2. Usque eo. 1. So far; accedere, Auct. B. Afric.: liciti sunt usque eo, quoad, &c., Cic.: inferiorem usque eo, nec, &c., id., to that extent, so far. 2. So long; usque eo, donec, Cic.; or, usque eo, dum, Cic.: Liv., so long till, as long as till: usque eo iocari, antequam — nominaretur, Cic., i. e. so long before, so long till. 3. So very, so very much, to such a degree; improbus, Cic.: abhorrebant, id.: also with ut; e. g. usque eo visum indignum ut, &c., id. 3. Usque quo. 1. As far as, so far as, up to that place; Plin.: usque quo Falcidia permittit, Pand. 2. So long till, until; Varr.: Pallad.: hence, quo usque (quousque), how long; properly, until how long; see QUOUSQUE. N.B. Quoad usque ad, &c., Liv. G. 38, must not be referred to this; usque belongs to ad, until our times. — Synon. Semper represents time as a certain space; but usque in a continued line, having its commencement in a certain point. Or, usque denotes progression in time, semper represents a permanent condition.

USQUE ADEO. See USQUE.
 USQUE EDEM, or USQUE DUM. See USQUE.

II. Need, necessity, occasion, case; si usus fuerit, Cic.: si usus veniat, Cæs.: also, wants, necessities, necessary things; usum provincie supplere, Cic.: quæ usus belli poscunt, Liv.: hence, 1. Usus est, it is necessary or requisite, there is need or occasion; mihi, i. e. I must, Ter.: the thing which is necessary is sometimes put in the ablative; naves, quibus usus non est, Cic., which are not needed; viribus, Virg.: naves, quibus consili usus non esset, Liv.: also in the accusative; ad eam rem usus est hominum astutum, Plaut.: also in the genitive; si quo usus operæ sit, Liv.; unless we render usus in this place, usefulness. 2. Usus may frequently be rendered, Accident, hap, chance, case; usus non veniet, that will not happen, Ter.: si usus fuerit, Cic.; see above: si usus veniat, Cæs.; see above: hence, usu, by accident or chance, perchance, Plaut.: especially, usu venire, to happen, fall out, come to pass; mihi usu venturum non arbitrabar, ut, &c., Cic.: ante quam hoc usu veniret, id., before this should happen: quod usu memoria paverunt venit, id., it has happened: we find also, usu venire, for usu venire, id.; the distinction which some make between these expressions is quite frivolous and imaginary.

USUS, a, um. See UTO.

USUSFRUCTUS, us. m. (for usus et fructus) Usufructus, a having the use but not the property of a thing; Cic.: we find also, usui et fructus, id.

UT, or UTI. (uti) 1. Adv., i. e. when it does not of itself govern a conjunctive. 1. As, just as, like as; when it is frequently followed by sic, Cic.; or ita, Ter.; or item, Cic.: it is also preceded by ita; e. g. ita, ut res sese habet, narrato, Ter.: we find also, ut si, for si; e. g. ut si quid promittere possum, Hor.: abstinuit aleno, ut si quis unquam, Suet. N.B. 1. Ut—ita (sic) is put for et—et, As well—as, not only—but also; ut cum Titamis, ita cum Gigantibus, Cic.: also for quidem (indeed, although)—sed (but, but yet, yet); seniores patrum ut nimis ferociores credere (for credebant) juvenes esse, ita malis, si, &c., Liv., the older senators believed indeed that—but yet they preferred. 2. Ut may sometimes be rendered, The, when quisque (for aliquis) and a superlative (for a comparative) are found with it; ut quisque optime Græce scirent, ita esse nequissimum, the better one understood Greek, the worse man he was, Cic.: ut quidque primum gestum erit, ita primum exponetur, id.; also ita precedes; colendum esse ita quemque maximo, ut quisque maxime virtutibus erit ornatus, Cic.: and ita is sometimes omitted; ut quisque maxime perspicit, quid, &c.—is prudentissimum haberi solet, id.; also, ita and the superlative are omitted; ut quæque retro, &c., Liv. 30. 10. 3. Ut, in oaths and asseverations, As, as sure as, when ita precedes; ita mihi meam voluntatem comprobat, ut ego accipi, &c., Cic.: also, the clause with ut is omitted; ita me dixi juveni! id. 2. How, in what manner; videte, ut hoc corruerit, Cic.: videtisne, ut eos agitent Furie, id.: hence, How! in exclamations; ut pro nihilo putavit! Cic.: ut gaudet! Hor.: ut vidi, ut perii! ut me malus abstulit error! Virg., as soon as I saw her how I was lost (enamoured)! 2. In interrogation, for quomodo? How? ut valet? Hor. 3. As, according as; ut ipse præscriperat, Nep.: ut nunc sunt mores, Ter.: ut potui, tuli, as well as I could, Cic.: hence, ut si, as if, as though; ut si esset res mea, id.: ut si ullam partem, Quint.: also, ut is repeated, or cunque is appended to it, however, howsoever; ut ut erant, Ter.: utcunque se affectum volet, Cic. 4. As, with a superlative, for quam; e. g. ut blandissime potest, Cic., as smoothly as he can. 5. As, in citing an example, for which we also say, as for example, or, for example; quæ tactu intimo sentiant, ut dolorem, Cic.: ut si quis ægre ferat, id. 6. As soon as, when (for cum); ut hæc audivit, Cic.: hence, ut primum, as soon as, id.; see Zumpt's Grammar, § 506, concerning the tenses after it, and ut primum: ut subito, as soon as, or, when on a sudden, Ov.: ut means also, since that, since; vigesima non fuit, ut cupiunt te cernere silvæ, Calp.: ut sumus in Ponto, Ov.: ut careo vobis, id.: ut illos libros edidisti, Cic. 7. When; Catull. 8. In explanation and proof, As, even as, inasmuch as; leti, ut ad regem diu desideratum, concessere, Liv.: horret onus ut parvo corpore majus, Hor.: especially with qui (qua, &c.), as one who; ut qui meminissimus, Liv.: ut quod sepulcrum publice datum est, id.: prælium, ut quod maxime unquam (commisum est), id., i. e. as great as ever was fought before it. 9. Ut is used redundantly before qui, qua, quod; e. g. prælium, ut quod, &c.; see above: thus also, ut quo nos recipiemus? Liv., for quo nos, &c.: on the contrary, we find, ut qui, for ut; e. g. ita es animata, ut qui imperii expers sis, as if thou, &c., Plaut. II. Conj., i. e. when of itself it governs a conjunctive. 1. That, after talis, tantus (also, is, for talis), tot, tam, adeo, sic, ita, and the like, after verbs and substantives which denote a will, wish, entreaty, advice, care, permission, command, necessity, &c.: see Grammar. N.B. 1. It is also used after the phrase, to fall at one's feet; ad pedes accidere, Cic., because this contains the idea of entreaty: also after inusitatum est, id.; certum est, id.; which are otherwise followed by an accusative and infinitive: thus also, after verum est, Nep.: verisimile est, Cic.: accedit, i. e. to which is added, id.: integrum est, id.: sententia, id.: probari potest, id.: obsequi, Liv.: esse; e. g. est ut deceat, for deceat, Cic.: especially after a comparative; videtur esse altius quam ut id suspicere possumus, id.: after magis, Quint.: and after factio; e. g. invitus feci, ut ejicerem, Cic., it was against my inclination. 2. Ut is often omitted, after esse, oportet, oportet, rogo, &c.: also after amitto, Liv.: sino, id.: and concedo, Catull. 2. That, in order that, ut verè dicam, that I may speak the truth, to say the truth, Cic. 3. In expressing anxious desire, Oh that! ut satis contemplata modo sis, Ter. 4. In conclusions, Hence, so that; ut dubitare debeat nemo, &c., hence, no one could, or, so that no one could, Cic. 5. In wishes, Oh that! would that! ut dolor pariat, quod jam diu parturit! Cic.: ut te dii perduint! Ter.: concerning the tenses after ut in wishes, see Zumpt's Grammar, § 571: Heindorf, ad Hor. Sat. 1, l. 55, p. 15. 6. In concessions, Granted that, even though; ut omnes dii adjuvent, Cic.: ut ita sit, id.: ut desint vires, tamen est laudanda voluntas, Ov. 7. That, namely that, in explaining a word or sentence; genere largitionis, ut aliis detur, aliis auferatur, Cic. 8. That not, lest not, after words denoting fear; as, after timeo, Cic.: after metuo, Ter.: after vereor, Cic. 9. It is often used in impassioned language where it cannot be retained in translation; tu ut unquam te corrigas? Cic. N.B. 1. Ut for ut is frequently found; Cic.: Cæs. 2. Ut, That, with an indicative; ut—inquit, Liv. 27, 49; where the indicative may be accounted for by the distance of the verb from the participle: thus also with an infinitive; Liv. 5, 15. 3. Ut is sometimes repeated, especially when many words intervene; ut quibus—essent, ut hic, &c., Liv. 4. Ut ne, for ut non, is frequently found, Cic.: also, ut non, id. N.B. We find ut ne and ut non, when the ut refers to the whole clause, but the negative only to some words in the same; ut ne being used when the negation pertains to a verb or adverb, ut non when it refers to a noun. 5. Quod ut, for ut; like quod si, for si, &c.; Virg. 6. Ut quid? for cur, Tert.

UTCUNQUE, or UTCUNQUE ADV. I. Howsoever, in whatsoever manner; utcunque se videri voluit, Cic.: cetera utcunque facilius dissimulari Tac.: utcunque animum collegi, Plin. Ep., as well as I could. II. Wheresoever; utcunque mecum eritis, Hor.

UTENSILIS, e. (utor) Fit for or adapted to use; Varr.: hence, Utensilia, subst., All things which are used; especially in husbandry, implements, utensils, materials; Liv.: Colum.

UTENSILITAS, atis. f. (utensilis) Usefulness; Tert.

UTENTIOR, SE CLAUSE

UTER, tris. m. (allied to uterus) A skin, leathern bag or bottle; Virg.: vini, full of wine, Plaut.: Ulysses was said to have received the winds from Æolus in a leathern bottle, which he could employ at pleasure; hence, Æolus Ithacis inclusimus utribus Euros, Ov.; for, scripsimus de Ulysse, qui ventos inclusos utribus ab Æolo accepit: also fig.; tumidis infla sermonibus utrem, Hor. N.B. Plur. utria, Liv. Andr.

UTER, utra, utrum. (from utroque, i. e. in utroque) I. Which? whither of the two? in interrogation; uter nostrum popularis est? Cic.: sometimes ne is appended; Hor.: or without interrogation; eligas, utrum velis, Cic.: quærite, utra graviori servitute liberati sint, Liv. N.B. 1. The comparative, instead of the superlative is usually found with it; utrius oratio propius accedere, &c., Cic.: but we sometimes find the superlative; utri potissimum consulendum sit, id. 2. It is sometimes followed by the plural; uter meruisti, Plaut. 3. It is sometimes used with reference to more than two; Vitr. 4. An is sometimes used after it, as after utrum; utros habueris libros, an utrosque, nescio, Cic. II. The other, when uter or neuter precedes; uter utri insidias fecerit, which for the other, Cic. III. Both; sibine utri rapiat an alter cedat alteri, Cic. IV. For uterunque, Whichever of two; utrum horum dixerit, in eo culpa hærebit, Cic. N.B. The i in the genitive is properly long, but it is short in Horace.

UTERCŪLUS, i. m. (with the first syllable short, from uterus) A little belly; Plin.

UTERCŪLUS, i. m. (with the first syllable long, from uter) A small leathern bag or bottle; Apul.

UTER-CUNQUE, utrā-cunque, utrum-cunque. Whichever of two; uterunque vicerit, Cic.

UTÉRINUS, a, um. (uterus) Born of the same mother, uterine; fratres, Cod. Just.

UTER-LIBET, utrā-libet, utrum-libet. Whichever of two, one of two; utrumlibet elige, which you please, Cic.

UTERNE, utrāne, utrumne. See UTER.

UTER-QUE, utrā-que, utrum-que. Both the one and the other, both, each; utroque (homine), Cic.: uterque nostrum, both of us, id.: horum uterque cecidit, id.: horum utrumque, id.: uterque Phœbus, the rising and the setting sun, the east and west, Ov.: uterque polus, i. e. the north and south, id.: oceanus, i. e. orientalis et occidentalis, id.: solis utranque domum, the east and west, id.: parens, i. e. father and mother, id.: fortuna, Nep., i. e. good and bad circumstances: in utranque partem, on both sides, in either case, Cic.: hæc in utranque partem disputatio habita, Cæs., i. e. pro et contra. N.B. 1. Uterque for alter, when uterque precedes; uterque utriusque est cordi, Ter.: uterque utriusque esset in conspectu, Cæs. 2. Sometimes the plural follows; curremus uterque, Ter. 3. The singular is used with reference to two individual persons or things; but the plural with respect to two parties, companies, &c.; a quibus utriusque, Cic. Orat. 3, 26: but we often find the plural also with reference to two individuals; jubeo promi utrosque (scyphos), Cic.: utraque perierunt, Cæs.: utrorumque Dionysiorum, Nep.: utraque res, Ter. N.B. The antepenult of utriusque is usually long; but it is short in Lucretius and Horace. — See the synonyms under UTERUS.

UTÉRUM, i. n. for uterus. See UTERUS.
 UTÉRUS, i. m. (from ἔρα). I. The lower part of the belly, the paunch; Plaut.: Virg. II. The womb, matrix. 1. Of women; Plaut.: Ov.: pondus uteri, i. e. fetus, Propert.: hence, A birth, the act of bringing forth; uno utero, Pand.: also, a birth, i. e. child; Tac.: uterum gerere, to be pregnant, Cels. 2. Of animals, in the same significations; Varr.: Plin. 3. Fig. i. q. Folliculus, An envelope, case; Lucr. III. Fig. A belly, the inner part of a thing; as, of a cask, Colum.: of a ship, Tac.: of the Trojan horse, Virg. N.B. 1. Uterum, for uterus; Plaut. 2. Uter, for uterus, Cæcil.

UTER-VIS, utrā-vis, ūtrum-vis. I. Which of the two you will, one of two, either; qui utramvis norit, Ter.: utrumvis facere potes, Cic. II. Both (without distinction); Plaut.: in aurem utrumvis dormire, Ter.—Synon. Utervis and quivis are distinguished from uterque and quisque; inasmuch as the former express only one of both or all, to which one the predicate is referred, yet without distinction; while the latter point to each individual separately (and in this respect are distinguished from ambo and omnes), but so that the predicate refers to both at the same time and in common; if, however, a predicate is to refer to either of two or several, but to only one at once, then we find utervis and quivis, but not uterque and quisque.

UTI, i. Infinitive of utor. II. For uti; see UT.
 UTIBILIS, e. (utor) That can be used, useful; hence, serviceable, profitable; Plaut.

UTILIS, e. (utibilis, from utor) I. That may be used, fit for use, fit, proper, adapted; homo ad nullam rem utilis, Cic.: miles, Ov.: dant utile lignum navigiis pinos, Virg.: calamus utilissimus fistulis, Plin.: also with an infinitive; Hor.: hence, Utilis, That can keep himself from falling; Ov. II. Useful, profitable, advantageous, serviceable; res, Cic.: vita mea utilior, id.: utilissimus civis, id. III. Right, equitable; Pand.: actio, id., founded not on law, but on equity.

UTILITAS, ātis, f. (utilis) I. Usefulness, serviceableness, service; Ter.: Cic.: belli, Cic., i. e. in war. II. Profit, advantage; utilitatem afferre, Cic.: capere ex re, id.: habere, id.: utilitates alicui præbere, id.

UTILITER, adv. I. Usefully, profitably, with advantage; Cic.: utillus, Ov.: utilissime, Plin. II. Rightly, duly; Pand.

UTI-NAM, adv. In expressions of wish, Oh that! would that! utinam incubat in causam, Cic.: utinam haberetis, id.: utinam non, id.: or, utinam ne, Ter.: Cic.: see Zumpt's Grammar, § 571; Heindorf. ad Hor. Sat. i. 1, 55, respecting the tenses after utinam. N.B. Quod utinam, for utinam (as quod si, for si, &c.); e. g. quod utinam minus vitæ cupidi fuissemus, Cic.

UTI-QUE, adv. I. For et uti (uti). I. And that; Cic. 2. And how; Sall.: Liv. II. Hovsoever; hence, 1. Certainly, indeed, surely; si utique vellent, Liv.: ne utique vellet, id.: utique apud me sis, Cic.: quæ ad me utique perferantur, id.: illud scire utique cupio, id.: nisi alterum consulem utique ex plebe fieri necesse sit, Liv. 2. At least, surely at least; utique posttride, Cic.: una utique parte, Liv. III. Only, simply; sed utique humiliores, Pand. IV. Especially; utique postremis mensibus, Liv.: commota est plebs, utique postquam, &c., id. N.B. Uteique, for utique, and that; S. C. de Bacch.

N.B. Videro, for video; Ter.: Cic. The passive Videor, visum, is used in all these significations. 1. To be seen; visum sum, Ter.: quo viso, Cic.: hence, Visum, subst.; see VISUM: also, videtur, videatur, Cic.: especially, videri often means, to seem, appear, have the appearance of; and it is construed in two ways; 1st Personaliter, i. e. when a nominative as a subject (or an accusative and infinitive in the place of it) precedes or is understood, and an infinitive follows, and if the infinitive be esse, the following predicate is in the nominative (except when it is an accusative and infinitive); however, esse is frequently omitted, but still a nominative (or accusative and infinitive) follows; quæ videtur esse, Cic.: quod uti videretur (esse), id.: rem iniquiorem visum iri intelligebant, id. Again, it is the same thing whether I say, the book seems to me to be excellent, or, I consider the book to be excellent; and hence, videor may frequently be rendered, To believe or consider to be; quibusdam sapiens videtur (sc. esse), Cic.: amens mihi fuisse visum sum, id.: sometimes the dative is omitted; audire vocem visa sum militis (sc. mihi), Ter., i. e. I seemed to hear. See Benecke ad Cic. Cat. 1, 1, 2, p. 14. 2nd Impersonaliter, i. e. when no subject (nominative, or accusative and infinitive) precedes; It seems; æquum tibi videtur, ut—dicam? Plaut.: also with ut; e. g. Fabio satis visum, ut—intraret, Liv.: or an accusative and infinitive; non mihi videtur, ad beatè vivendum satis posse virtutem, Cic.: thus also, malitia, quæ vult videri, se esse prudentiam, which would seem to be, id.; we may construe the words thus, vult, se videri esse, &c.; the more usual form would be, vult videri esse prudentia: also, videri, to seem good; visum est mihi conscribere, it seemed good to me, I have determined, id.: tibi si videretur, if it shall seem good to you, id.: qui imitantur, quos cuque visum est, sc. imitari, imitatores esse, id. Thus also of decrees of the magistrates or senate, or the sentences of judges; when videri is also used as a verb personal, To consider, to be of opinion; Scipionem rectè videri fecisse, Liv.: pronunciat, Sthenium literas—corruptis videri, Cic. 2nd Passive of video, to see, i. e. to consider, reflect; visum est, Plaut. 3. Passive of video, to see to, take care of, attend to; videndum esse aliud consilium, Cic. N.B. 1. Supine, visu; e. g. terribiles

OF THE AS.

The Romans used this word (As) to denote, I. The copper coin, value (in the time of Cicero) about three farthings of our money. II. The unit of weight (libra), or of measure (jugerum). III. Any unit or integer, considered as divisible; as, of inheritances, interest, houses, &c.; whence, ex asse heres, one who inherits the whole. (See this word in the Dictionary.)—The multiples of the As are, Dupondius (duo pondo; for the As originally weighed a pound), i. e. 2 Asses; Sestertius (sesqui tertius), i. e. 2½ Asses; Trepass, i. e. 3 Asses; Quattuross, i. e. 4 Asses; and so on to Centussis, i. e. 100 Asses.—The As, whatever unit it represented, was divided into twelve parts or uncia, and the different fractions received different names, as follows:—

As - - - - - 12	Bes - - - - - 8	Triens - - - - - 4	Uncia - - - - - 1
Deunx - - - - - 11	Sextunx - - - - - 7	Quadrans, or Teruncius 3
Dextans - - - - - 10	Semis - - - - - 6	Sextans - - - - - 2	Sescuncia - - - - - 1½
Dodrans - - - - - 9	Quincunx - - - - - 5

The Uncia was divided in the following manner:—

<table style="width: 100%; border-collapse: collapse;"> <tr><td>1 Uncia contained 2 Semiuncia.</td></tr> <tr><td>— 3 Duella.</td></tr> <tr><td>— 4 Sicilici.</td></tr> <tr><td>— 6 Sextula.</td></tr> </table>	1 Uncia contained 2 Semiuncia.	— 3 Duella.	— 4 Sicilici.	— 6 Sextula.	<table style="width: 100%; border-collapse: collapse;"> <tr><td>1 Uncia contained 24 Scrupula (Scriptula, or Scripula).</td></tr> <tr><td>— 48 Oboli.</td></tr> <tr><td>— 144 Siliquæ.</td></tr> </table>	1 Uncia contained 24 Scrupula (Scriptula, or Scripula).	— 48 Oboli.	— 144 Siliquæ.
1 Uncia contained 2 Semiuncia.
— 3 Duella.
— 4 Sicilici.
— 6 Sextula.
1 Uncia contained 24 Scrupula (Scriptula, or Scripula).
— 48 Oboli.
— 144 Siliquæ.

ROMAN COINS.

These were the Teruncius, Sembella, and As or Libella, of copper; the Sestertius, Quinarius or Victoriatus, Denarius, of silver; and the Aureus, of gold.

	s. d. q.		s. d. q.

Decem sestertia	80	14	7	0
Centum, centum sestertia, or centum millia sestertium	807	5	10	0

DECIES SESTERTIUM, ETC., CENTIES BEING UNDERSTOOD.

Decies sestertium, or Decies centena millia nummum	8,072	18	4
Centies, or Centies H. S.	80,729	3	4
Millies H. S.	807,291	13	4
Millies centies H. S.	888,020	16	8

N.B. The marks denoting a Sestertius nummus are IIS. LLS. HS; which are properly abbreviations for 2½ asses. — Observe also, that when a line is placed over the numbers, centena millia is understood, as in the case of the numeral adverbs; thus, HS. MC. is millies centies HS.; whereas HS. MC. is only 1100 Sestertii. — The Roman Pondo Argenti is computed at a little more than 3*l.* of our money.
